SIGNING OFF

So here it is. The last print issue of DUNGEON magazine.

I've known it was coming for several months now, but today still came faster than I expected it to. Fortunately, I did manage to get most of what I wanted into the magazine (dinosaurs on the cover, a Lovecraftian adventure, an updated Maure Castle, 3rd-edition stats for the frogemoth, pictures of several of my player characters, and stats for Eggwily). The only major project I missed was that I never did get that conversion/sequel to "Expedition to the Barrier Peaks" in. But since that would have required a 300-page magazine (and three times the work), it's probably best for my sanity that it didn't happen after all.

Working on the list of top ten villains and adventure sites to decorate this issue's enormous index of all things DUNGEON (and some things POLYHEDRON), I realized something. There's been an awful lot of excellence in DUNGEON over the course of the last 21 years. Back in issue #116, we asked a panel of expert game designers to list their favorite DUNGEON adventures, and not a single one of the top ten adventures they chose was one that Erik and I had published under our watch. So it's not without some pride that, when I asked around for folks' favorite villains and locations for this issue, the majority of the answers were from more recent issues. Locations like Maure Castle and the Styx, and villains like Vanthus and Lashonna, really seem to have found their fans, and I'm really proud of them.

I, of course, have my own favorites among DUNGEON's adventures. Oldies like "Caermoor" from issue #2 (wherein the PCs have to save a small village from the powerful devil Baalphégor, who I dropped a reference to in "Dawn of a New Age") on through to gems like issue #15's "The Elephant's Graveyard" (my first TPK as a DM, thanks to a greater basilisk), issue #30's "Thiondar's Legacy" (my first TPK as a player, thanks to a certain black dragon), issue #70's "Kingdom of the Ghouls" (still my favorite Underdark adventure, and also the first adventure I ran in 3.0—at the time as a high-level playtest for the new rules), and issue #100's "The Lich-Queen's Beloved" (which recently served, in a highly-modified form, as the capstone adventure for my last campaign). And that doesn't even scratch all the incredible adventures I've been able to print as an editor for the magazine, including new classics like "Maure Castle," "The Coming Storm," "The Styx," "Chimes At Midnight," and "The Whispering Cairn."

All that said... there's one more "adventure" I'd like to mention, even though it's technically 12 adventures and not one. Having written part of DUNGEON's first adventure path and helping to plot out its second, Savage Tide is the one that I can really call my own. While many key elements certainly came from other folks here at Paizo and from the adventures' authors, the campaign's name and the overarching plot was mostly from me. I couldn't be happier with how it turned out, and I'd like to thank all of the authors and artists who helped me make what may just be the best D&D campaign ever.

And I suppose that about sums it up. With Pathfinder, I'll still be deeply involved and committed to bringing you the best campaigns I can pay the best authors to write and the best artists to illustrate. We've got some exciting things planned for the future, but I can't help but feel sad when I look back at the past. DUNGEON has given me nearly 650 adventures over the past 21 years, certainly enough to keep my D&D games running for a long time. Assuming modestly, on average, that a DUNGEON adventure gives enough material for two game sessions, that's enough to keep any once-a-week gaming group busy for another 21 years.

Still, I think it's fair to say I could have used another 21 years of DUNGEON.

So long, old friend!

FROM THE PUBLISHER

Readers,

Recently, Wizards of the Coast decided not to renew Paizo Publishing's license to create and distribute DRAGON and DUNGEON magazines. Both magazines will cease publication following the release of their September issues, which ship to subscribers and newsstands in August. The final issues of the magazines will be DUNGEON #150 and DRAGON #359.

Wizards of the Coast will be moving the kind of content currently found in the magazines to an online model. Both companies remain on good terms and continue to discuss future opportunities for publishing partnerships. As more information becomes available on Wizards of the Coast's plans for the DRAGON and DUNGEON brands, we'll keep you updated in the remaining issues of the magazines.

Paizo will continue to create products compatible with the world's most popular roleplaying game. In addition to our existing line of GameMastery accessories like Item Cards and the new Critical Hit Deck, this summer will see the debut of two exciting RPG lines from the same creative minds that have brought you the magazines these last five years. In June, Paizo kicks off its new GameMastery Modules line, featuring monthly 32-page adventures from top designers like Nicholas Logue, Richard Pett, Wolfgang Baur, and Jason Bulmahn! Each lavishly illustrated full-color GameMastery Module is designed to be used easily in a wide variety of campaigns, and will meet or exceed the expectations you've come to expect from Paizo Publishing.

August sees the debut of Pathfinder, a new monthly 96-page, perfect-bound, OGL-compatible full-color softcover Adventure Path book printed on high-quality paper. Over the last several months, the same editors who bring you DRAGON and DUNGEON have been developing the next evolution in RPG campaigns, and we hope you'll take some time to look at what we have to offer. Pathfinder will be sold at hobby retail stores, bookstores, and online at paizo.com, and—though it's a book, not a magazine—we'll be offering a subscription service for gamers eager to add a vorpal edge to their campaigns. In fact, you can subscribe to Pathfinder right now and receive a free bonus Player's Guide to the first Pathfinder Adventure Path: Rise of the Runelords.

Speaking of subscriptions, the discontinuation of DRAGON and DUNGEON will leave many of our valued subscribers with excess subscription credit. Paizo has set up a special transition web page at paizo.com/transition that offers multiple options to these subscribers. A brief summary of these options follows:

Pathfinder: Current subscribers can transfer their existing post-September subscription credit to monthly volumes of Pathfinder at a generous discount as an easy way to try out the new publication. This is your opportunity to get in on the ground floor of this major new series, and we'd certainly love the chance to keep delivering exciting gaming content to you on a monthly basis.

DRAGON and DUNGEON Back Issues: Subscribers can choose to receive select back issues on a one-for-one basis based on remaining subscription credit. This is a great way to fill holes in your collection.

Paizo.com Store Credit: Paizo.com is the Internet's leading online hobby store, with more than 22,000 gaming products from hundreds of publishers. Subscribers can swap their excess subscription credit for store credit on our website at a generous 120% exchange rate.

Refund: If none of the above options appeal to you, Paizo will issue you a refund check for your remaining subscription credit. (Refund checks will be issued starting October, 2007, and may take several weeks to arrive.)

Subscribers without access to the Internet should contact our Customer Service Department for more information about the above choices and a form to help you make your selection. Write us at Magazine Transition/Paizo Publishing, LLC/2700 Richards Road, Suite 201/Bellevue, WA 98005. We anticipate a large volume of mail related to the transition, so please be patient with us as we address your needs.

DRAGON and DUNGEON have been the backbone of Paizo Publishing since we spun off from Wizards of the Coast's periodicals department in 2003, and both magazines have been an integral part of the RPG publishing world for decades. Bringing the magazines to you every month has been a true honor, and we in the Paizo family look forward to the continuing honor of serving your gaming needs for years and years to come.

Sincerely,

ERIK

DUNGEON #147

We've covered a lot of ground in the last few issues, so rather than focus solely on issue #147 (pictured above), I'd like to point out the highlights from issue #148 and #149 as well.

The Savage Tide kicked into overdrive in these issues, taking the PCs to the depths of the Abyss and beyond. Just being able to namedrop Iggwilv and Orcus and Charon on the cover made me giggle like a lunatic.

In the low-level arena, we robbed a bank in Eberron, fought an unkillable monster from the woods, and wandered back to the city of Sasserine to find the place infested with bickering intelligent weapons. As it works out, nothing blows the expected wealth gain for an adventure out of the water quite like making all of the villains magic weapons!

And in the game's most popular band for adventuring (the sweet spot of 6th-12th level), we closed out the Spawn of Sehan campaign arc with a trip up the hill to fight yak folk, got down and dirty in Greyhawk's city of Spinecastle, and took some time off in the lovely (and monster-infested) Moonshae Isles in the Forgotten Realms.

Back issues of DUNGEON are available at paizo.com.

Looking Back, Part One

I just recently received the 148th issue of DUNGEON and I was very impressed to hear that in the last issue you are going to publish an archive listing of all the adventures that have appeared in the magazine. This will be a most amazing thing for me, as recently a friend of mine, who unfortunately doesn't play D&D anymore, gave me the first 52 issues of your fine magazine. I started to subscribe to at issue #90, and I've since been able to collect the intervening issues. Huzzah, I will shortly have all 150 issues of your excellent periodical.

I find that my DM style is to take published adventure material and interweave an overarching plot/campaign of my own design. This allows me to concern myself more with the plot and grander scope of things without having to be bogged down by the minutia of each encounter, setting, or NPC. Your magazine is a goldmine of ideas, adventures, and advice that makes my job of DMing not only easier but better in the eyes of my players. I salute you, sirs, on the part you have played as the 'silent' member of my game sessions.

I will miss the monthly issues of both magazines, but I'm certain that with minimal effort I can bring all the hundreds of adventures you have published to my gaming table, which should afford me several years, nay decades, of gaming fun.

Endings may be sorrowful, but they just sweeten the memories of the good times of the past, present, and those yet to come!

Three cheers and well met to DUNGEON and all of its contributors and creators!!!

Trevor Chapman

Looking Back, Part Two

As a youngster new to D&D I looked forward to the occasional DRAGON magazine that contained an adventure (and defacing the magazine by removing the staples to extract it). When DUNGEON magazine was announced I started my subscription, hopeful that I wouldn't miss a single issue. Through the years I never let it lapse, though I went through more than a decade of not playing while in college and starting a family. The bi-monthly arrival of DUNGEON was a constant through a lot of change and a very enjoyable way to pass spare moments.

I was surprised at how hard the news that DUNGEON would no longer be in print hit me. Not only had the magazine been a companion through some of the most important phases of my life; getting an adventure published had been a goal of mine. After a series of (very polite) rejection letters from Roger Moore in the late 80s, my attention turned to other goals. I achieved a few of them and with the third edition getting me back in the game I started to focus on adventures for DUNGEON again.

LAST WORDS

JAMES LAFORD SUTTER

Before I started working for DUNGEON, I had never run a published adventure in my life. In fact, I was downright snobby about it—after all, shouldn't any self-respecting DMs be able to create their own adventures? Going to a magazine or module felt like a crutch, an admission of failure. Play somebody else's adventure? No thanks.

Then I discovered Paizo and, through it, DUNGEON magazine. I'll never forget when Erik Mona walked up to my desk, threw down a tome of a manuscript, and said, "So, you want to edit? Go through this and tell me what changes you suggest."

The document in question? Erik's own "The Whispering Cairn" and Diamond Lake backdrop. Talk about trial by fire.

Apparently my changes must have been alright, because I'm still here, but something else of note occurred that day. As I read through that adventure, editing commas where I dared, I realized something: the adventure was good. More, it was great. With every scene my brain spun off in a heretofore unexplored direction. I was shocked—how could a published adventure capture my imagination so? With that adventure, and every one that's followed, I've realized the truth of the matter—that rather than stifling creativity, the structure of a published adventure is the starting point, the support that allows the imagination to range far and wide in pursuit of those all-important details. Each time I see my seven Savage Tide players flee from mummy rot or send anchors bearing shadow pearls into the sun, I gladly admit that I was wrong.

And now here I am in the final issue, the last editor ever to be hired onto DUNGEON magazine. My eternal thanks to everyone—Paizoites and readers alike—for letting me sit at your table. It's been an honor and a privilege.

JEREMY WALKER

O Adventure!

Reach from dark depths to touch the sky;

Rest in peace my friend.

While I'll never be published in DUNGEON, I take satisfaction in witnessing the birth (and rebirth under Paizo after the magazine had fallen on some hard times) of what must stand as one of the most ambitious hobby magazines to date. Through twenty-one years, the magazine was able to maintain a tight focus and provide quality adventures. In doing so it launched the careers of many very talented authors. The entire hobby is in its debt.

It'll be missed.

Brian Young

Cary, North Carolina

Thanks for the kind words, and congratulations on the full collection of the magazine! And you're both right, endings are indeed sad, but at the same time it's an opportunity for change and growth.

As for DMing styles, I suspect that most of DUNGEON's readers fall into the category of "hunter/gatherer"—I certainly do. Sometimes, I'll run an adventure word for word from the magazine, but other times I'll pick and choose, sometimes just keeping a map or an NPC name or even a single picture to use as a player handout.

Long Live Savage Tide!

First of all I wanted to say how disheartened I am that your magazines are ending publication. I have enjoyed them. So after reading "Down with the Savage Tide" in issue #148 I was finally prompted to write. I have been playing D&D for most of my life—I'm 25 and currently running the Savage Tide campaign. This is absolutely the best campaign I have ever been a part of! We are only halfway through, and I could not be more impressed. I really can tell the writers were passionate about this and am very excited about where the plot is headed. What I love about the Savage Tide is its uniqueness. The jungle, sailing, pirates, the Olmans—I could go on and on. Excellent work.

On that note I was very relieved to see you are going to continue your efforts with Pathfinder. I read about it and can't help but notice many similarities to Savage Tide. Which prompts me to my next question.

I'm interested in a subscription... but what if I don't like it? Is there a money-back guarantee?

Gabe Hanson

Via Email

Any similarities you might see between the DUNGEON Adventure Paths and Pathfinder are quite justified—many of the same authors, artists, and editors who brought you Shackled City, Age of Worms, and Savage Tide are working on Pathfinder's Adventure Paths. So chances are that you'll find the transition a happy one. The subscriptions we're offering for Pathfinder are month-to-month, similar to how paying rent or subscribing to a MMORPG works. We aren't offering a money-back guarantee, but if it turns out that Pathfinder's not for you, you can cancel your subscription at any time and not be saddled with months and months more of books you don't want.

Of course, I'm positive it won't come to such a drastic end. Having seen what authors like Nicolas Logue, Richard Pett, and Wolfgang Baur and artists like Wayne Reynolds, Andrew Hou, Warren Mahy, and Ben Wootten have cooked up for Pathfinder makes me confident that anyone who loved Savage Tide will find a lot more to love in Pathfinder.

DMs Are Too Busy!

Your reply to Bob in issue #147 regarding conversion sidebars being a lot of work included a question: "And in the end, customizing a pre-written adventure is one of the fun parts about being a DM, isn't it?" I would like to reply to your reply: in a word, NO.

In a few more words, I've been a DM since 1979, running many a "module" (still my favorite word for adventure/scenario) at the Hodge Student Center at USC-S—most all of which I painstakingly wrote myself. I feel I've done my time, and should now be able to enjoy my latter years in leisurely ease, using only those modules that are pre-written, maps pre-drawn with NO typos, and completely idiot-proof. I've lived through 24-hour-straight, weekend-long campaigns, Greyhawk Ruins (still the best pre-packaged module I've ever seen, for my money), and the horrible lows (the emasculation of D&D when they briefly eliminated demons and devils, and the addition of a 7th stat [comeliness?]), so as I approach 50, I've earned the break.

I am truly sad to hear that DUNGEON and DRAGON will soon cease production—DUNGEON more so, as I really find the adv... modules handy. The official Wizards comment that everyone nowadays goes to the internet for this information is, in two words, horse hockey. I go to the computer for one thing only—to send e-mails like this one. And I still prefer to write letters and send questions by mail.

Needless to say, with the demise of these two magazines, so will go my purchasing of D&D products. As much as I love the D&D mini skirmish game (a $150/month habit), it's my one way of protesting the demise of a great thing for no good reason.

You guys did a heckuva job.

Roger Cox
Spartanburg, SC

Hal Your point is well taken, Roger! But I'm still not convinced that Sealing the Adventure Sidebars are worth, say, cutting the slots for a new magic item (which is what would have to go, for example, if I were to squeeze one of these sidebars in to this issue's "Prince of Demons"). Again, when third edition started, the Sealing the Adventure sidebars were as much about educating readers about how the new rules can be adjusted as they were about making the (at the time) small number of adventures available work for as wide an audience as possible.

Now that the game's been out for years, and now that there are hundreds of adventures to choose from, finding an adventure to fit your party's needs isn't as important anymore. And frankly, for this issue, it wasn't just an issue of space in the magazine—it was also an issue of manpower: Sealing the Adventure sidebars are fairly difficult to write (which in and of itself makes the best argument for having us include them for you in the adventures, frankly), and with this issue's additional pages, there simply wasn't time to write them up. I know, kind of a lame excuse, but there ya go.

I Was Dead Serious

Just read your editorial about the "acc HPI" and the last paragraph had me cheering when you asked if you could justify giving Demogorgon 338 hit points so that he has more hit points than anyone ever published in DUNGEON magazine. And to that I say two words. No, wait. Three words. Oh hell yeah!

Seriously, I think that would be a magnificent touch to DUNGEON magazine, honoring the original releases of the Monster Manual of yesteryears!

Here's hoping that you really do get to pull this off, even if it was perhaps mentioned in half-jest—I personally would love to see it! What a fabulous conclusion to the latest Adventure Path, as well as DUNGEON magazine. Imagine the players as they continue to drill endless points of damage into Demogorgon and he seems hardly bothered!

It would be priceless in so many ways!

On a side note, I am sad to hear that DUNGEON will be concluding. I had hoped to get one of my works published in DUNGEON—three of my submissions were declined, all for valid reasons ("Of Rats and Men," "Giant Problems," and "What Haunts the Hollow Fields?"). But that was back when second edition was still going strong. Real life swept me away (purchasing a home does that!) and I have been unable to sit down and either rewrap my submissions or write out the thousands of ideas floating in my head!

Tawnis Logue
Via Email

Check out page 93, Tawnis—you'll be happy to see that our pal Demogorgon did indeed weigh in with the most hit points in DUNGEON ever. At 338 hit points, he even blew my estimation out of the water. Of course, if players of the Savage Tide Adventure Path are up to snuff, they won't have to face the CR 33 version of Demogorgon—play your cards right and you'll only face the 639 hp version. If you're lucky.

Well, it looks like that's about it! In the last few lines I have here, I'd just like to thank all of the folks who made DUNGEON possible. I'm talking about everyone on the credits back in the table of contents, of course, but also about the great folks over at Wizards of the Coast who've been so kind about letting us play in their sandbox. And let's not forget everyone in the past who's worked on this great magazine. And, finally, the readers. You've been a source of inspiration for me, all of you. It's been a pleasure and an honor to be a part of your games. Keep the dice rolling! —James Jacobs

KILL BARGLE

BY JASON BULMAHN

BY JULIE DILLON

BY ROB LAZZARETTI

ANY SETTING, LOW-LEVEL (1ST-5TH), DUNGEON CRAWL

The renegade magic-user Bargle is wanted, dead or alive. After the murder of a local town cleric named Aleena, the ruling council put a sizable bounty on his head. Most speak of the wizard in hushed tones, and rumor holds that he dwells in the bowels of a nearby abandoned keep, performing all sorts of foul sorcery. Only the truly brave or perilously foolish, would dare to challenge Bargle in his own domain.

"Kill Bargle" is a D&D adventure designed for four 3rd-level characters. Though many of the names and themes used here trace their roots back to one of the original D&D campaign settings, the Known World of MYSTARA, this adventure is self-contained and can take place in any campaign setting. This adventure originally appeared in the Dungeons & Dragons Basic Dungeon Masters' Rulebook.

ADVENTURE BACKGROUND

Many years ago, a wizard named Gygar, a man of great and mysterious powers, ruled this part of the Realms of Man from his mighty castle Mistamere, located at the foot of the mountains to the north. Gygar died after a long and peaceful rule, but no successor was named. Over the years, the unclaimed castle fell into ruins.

Centuries later, the outline of the broken towers can still be seen from the town of Threshold, ever beckoning to seekers of danger, fame, and fortune. Rumors hold that monsters lurk within the ruins, guarding rich treasures.

The local town council has called for adventurers to brave the keep, offering a reward of 1,000 gold pieces for Bargle's capture. Recently blamed for the death of Aleena, a well-known cleric, Bargle is wanted by the council, dead or alive.

Preferably dead.

ADVENTURE SYNOPSIS

The PCs arrive at castle Mistamere, the supposed hideout of Bargle. After dealing with the carrion crawler that lives outside and the kobolds that control the yard, the characters must brave the keep and the two dungeon levels beneath it. Inside they face a tribe of kobolds, hungry scavengers, and deadly hazards before they reach Bargle's inner sanctum. Once there, they must combat cunning doppelgangers, charmed ogres, deadly traps, and the magic-user himself if they hope to bring an end to Bargle's deadly reign.

ADVENTURE HOOKS

The adventure begins with the party in the town of Threshold, staying at the Gold Dragon Inn. A signpost in the inn bears a wanted poster for Bargle's capture.

The town itself is full of wild rumors concerning Bargle and the castle, which lies only 1 miles away. While most of it is wild speculation and hearsay, a DC 15 Gather Information check reveals that Bargle was last seen near the castle, shortly after Aleena's death. If inquiring about the keep, a similar check reveals that it is said to be the lair of all sorts of monsters, particularly a tribe of kobolds that lives in the uppermost dungeons.

THE SURFACE RUINS

The journey to Castle Mustamere is a short one, with the trail to the ruins leading through pleasant farm fields. The only encounter along the way is with a farmer, who sits atop his wagon watching his workers till the fields. He is a friendly man who gladly volunteers that he has seen monsters go in and out of the keep over the past few months. Although he does not know their name, he describes them as small lizard creatures who walk about like men. The farmer has never seen Bargle, and is glad for it.

When the PCs reach the castle, read or paraphrase the following.

The walls of Castle Mustamere are jagged and full of small holes where stone blocks have tumbled to the earth, now scattered around the ruins. A gateway in the center of the front wall is now empty, and the outer doors lie rotting nearby on the ground, although an inner gateway still stands. This gateway seems to be the main entrance through the wall, although a gaping hole off to the left of the gate could provide another. Peeking over the outer wall, the PCs see the ruins of the castle keep backed against the sheer cliff of the mountain beyond.

Inside the keep, all of the floors, ceilings, and walls are made of stone. Unless otherwise noted, the chambers are unlit and have 10-foot high ceilings. There were once floors above the first, but they have long since crumbled into ruin.

1. RUINED DOORS (EL 4)

These rotting doors were once the outer gates to castle Mustamere.

Creature: Lurking in a shadowy den underneath the doors is a carrion crawler. Anyone approaching within 20 feet of the doors receives a DC 10 Spot check to notice it. The carrion crawler then charges out to attack, surprising anyone who fails their Spot check. It attacks until slain.

Carrion Crawler: hp 19; Monster Manual 31.

Treasure: Anyone investigating the floor underneath the doors discovers the skeleton of a kobold covered in treasure. All told, there are 1,002 gp, 980 cp, and two small garnets worth 100 gp each. Clutched in the kobold's skeletal hand is a small leather bag containing an additional 15 gp and a plain brass key. This opens the chest in area 19.

2. KOBOLD COURTYARD (EL 3)

There are three ways to enter the courtyard from outside the wall. The first is through the main gate, although the kobolds in the courtyard attempt to close the gates before the PCs can enter. The second is via a hole off to the right of the doors, but this route is treated as difficult terrain. Finally, the walls of the courtyard are quite ruined and relatively easy to scale. They are fifty feet tall and can be climbed with a DC 15 Climb check. Numerous small holes in the wall allow any character peering through to earn a DC 15 Spot check to notice the kobolds hiding in the courtyard.

Wooden Gateway: Hardness 5; hp 35; Break DC 21.

Creatures: Ten kobolds are stationed in the courtyard, tasked by their chieftain to keep watch for trouble. When the PCs approach, the kobolds close the doors leading into the courtyard and drop a heavy wooden bar. This task done, the kobolds spread out and train their slings on the southwest opening in the wall, waiting for the characters to climb through.

Kobolds (10): hp 4 each, Monster Manual 16

Tactics: The courtyard is littered with rubble, giving the kobolds cover from the opening in the wall. They fire sling stones at the PCs the moment they enter the courtyard and continue to do so until engaged in melee. Any remaining kobolds attempt to flee inside the keep if six of their number are slain.

Treasure: Aside from their poorly maintained gear, each kobold carries a small leather pouch containing 3d6 cp. In addition, the kobolds have a small iron box, hidden near the ruins of the east tower. The box can be found with a DC 25 Search check or revealed by a kobold prisoner. The box contains 100 gp and a black onyx gemstone worth 50 gp.

3 ENTRANCE

The unlocked doors leading into the keep are made from rotting wood.

This entrance hall is well traveled and littered with debris from outside. A DC 15 Survival skill check reveals that most of the tracks in this room lead to the north door, and from there on to areas 11, 12, and 13 before leading down to the first level of the dungeon.

4. WEST HALL (EL 2)

cold fireplace sits in the center of the north wall near a ragged hole in the ceiling.

Creature: This chamber is the lair of a dire bat that lives in the ruins of the floor above. If the fireplace is disturbed in any way, the bat shrieks and clambers down through the hole in the ceiling to attack. Once dropped to below half its hit points, the bat flies off to area 5 to roost atop the chest in that room. If confronted there, it fights to the death.

Dire Bat: hp 30, Monster Manual 62

Treasure: A DC 15 Search check of the room uncovers three old silver teaspoons worth 1 gp each. It also uncovers a small bag of dried peas that, while worthless, are useful to anyone who falls prey to the eternal slumber trap in area 12.

5 STORAGE

This room is filled with boxes and crates of many shapes and sizes.

The boxes are covered with a thick layer of dust. If any of the boxes are disturbed, a deep voice comes from a chest in the corner, asking, "Who's there?" Regardless of the response, the voice then calls out, "Is Bargle with you?" Again no matter the response, the voice calls out one last time, saying, "Oh, well, then, never mind." The voice does not speak again. The chest radiates faint illusion magic. All of the boxes and crates in this room are empty.

6. CLOSET

This dusty closet is meant to serve area 12, but also opens into area 5. It is empty save for a round batbox lying on the floor in the northwest corner. The batbox is tied with a simple string that is coated in sassone leaf residue, a dangerous contact poison (contact Fortitude DC 16, 2d6 hp/1d6 Con). Cutting the string and allowing it to fall away untouched can open the batbox safely.

Treasure: The batbox contains a musty red woman's hat. While this is of no value, a platinum hatpin worth 100 gp is hidden underneath.

7 EAST HALL

Four rickety wooden chairs sit in this room around a small table. In the center of the north wall is a fireplace.

The chimney in this room is choked with rotting timbers from the ruined second floor. Anyone searching the chimney must make a DC 10 Dexterity check to avoid disturbing the rubble. Failure causes the timbers to fall, dealing 1d6 points of damage to the searching character. A DC 15 Reflex save negates this damage.

Treasure: A DC 5 Search check of the chamber uncovers an old feather-stuffed pillow. A DC 10 Search check of the chimney uncovers a loose brick, behind which hides an ornate silver dagger worth 75 gp.

8. STORAGE (EL 1/2 OR 3)

This room is identical to area 5 with one exception; a large crate at the bottom of the pile holds an angry zombie.

Creature: The zombie remains perfectly still until its crate is opened at which point it rises to attack. Any fight in this room draws the zombies from area 9 in 1 round. The zombie fights to the death.

Human Zombie: hp 16 Monster Manual 266.

9. CLOSET (EL 3)

This small closet is crowded with dust and rubble.

Creatures: Four zombies wait for visitors in this chamber, attacking anyone who enters. They move to investigate any disturbance in areas 8 or 10 and fight to the death.

Human Zombies (4): hp 16 each, Monster Manual 266.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search check of the trash-strewn chamber uncovers a bracelet worth 500 gp.

10 BEDROOM

This chamber may have once been a fine bedroom, but its furnishings are now tattered and moldy.

The bed in this chamber radiates faint transmutation magic. Any sleeping creature placed on the bed is roused from any magical sleep effect (including the sleep effect from the bed in area 12). In addition, anyone placed on the bed gains a +10 bonus on their next saving throw to resist the effects of yellow mold.

If a character on the bed is tickled with a feather, he begins convulsing and sneezing for one round, kicking up a tremendous cloud of dust. Anyone in the room during this dust cloud must make a DC 15 Fortitude save or spend 1d6 rounds choking and coughing, unable to take any other action.

11 HALLWAY

This chamber contains a large amount of trash, but nothing else. A DC 15 Survival check made by a character with the Track feat reveals a trail that leads from the door to area 3 to area 12.

12 BEDROOM

This chamber is identical in appearance to area 10. The bed here radiates moderate enchantment magic. Anyone who touches it must make a DC 15 Will save or be compelled to lie down upon it. Those who do so must make another DC 15 Will save each round or fall asleep for 1d4 years.

Those who fall asleep cannot be roused normally but do not suffer from starvation or thirst while on the bed. They can be woken up in one of three ways. A dispel magic cast on the victim (CL 5th) rouses them. Placing a pea under the mattress does so as well, but causes the character to become fatigued. Finally, placing the character on the bed in area 10 causes them to wake in one round.

13 STAIRS (EL 1)

This small chamber leads to a set of stairs that descend to the dungeon below leading to area 22. A small fireplace in the northwest corner of the room is empty and unlit. A DC 15 Survival skill check in this chamber reveals a trail that leads from the door to area 12 to the stairs.

Creatures: Four kobolds lurk on the stairs leading down. They spring forth to attack anyone approaching their position. Each kobold has 5 gp tucked away in its belt.

14. TRAP ROOM

In the center of the room a large log rests with one end on the floor and the other held in the air suspended directly above a simple wooden chest by a rope that runs through hooks in the ceiling and wall before disappearing into the floor.

If the rope is cut, the log falls, smashing the chest and scattering its contents. A DC 5 Search check identifies a trap in this room, but a DC 15 Search check reveals there is no mechanism to drop the log. Should the log somehow fall onto a character anyway, it deals 3d6 points of damage, with a DC 10 Reflex save halving the damage.

Treasure: The chest is not locked and contains 50 gp, 500 sp, and one diamond worth 10 gp.

15. STATUE ROOM (EL 2)

A small statue of a kobold stands in the center of this room holding out a crude stone sword.

Trap: The statue in the center of this room is trapped and if touched, it suddenly spins around, its heavy stone sword attacking everyone adjacent to it.

Spinning Kobold Trap. CR 2, mechanical touch trigger; automatic reset; Atk +10 melee (1d6+3); multiple targets (everyone adjacent to the statue); Search DC 17, Disable Device DC 20.

16. STAIRS

This rubble-strewn staircase leads down to area 39.

17 KOBOLDS (EL 1)

This chamber contains rubble and trash, but little else of interest.

Creatures: Five kobolds live in this room, having been chased here by the zombies. Their job is to scare off intruders, and if they see anyone, they attack with a howl.

18. STATUE ROOM

19. DINING HALL (EL 6)

A long wooden table occupies the center of this room surrounded by a dozen plain wooden chairs. Human skeletons, wearing the rags of fine dinner attire, occupy four of the chairs. On the table in front of each chair sits a golden dinner plate, accompanied by a dusty glass goblet and dull silverware. A large stone fireplace opens in the north wall.

This chamber contains both a deadly hazard and dangerous guardians, and the kobolds avoid it at all costs.

Each of the gold dinner plates are actually tin coated with a layer of yellow mold (Dungeon Master's Guide 76). Due to the mold's small size, however, the cloud of spores produced by these plates only affects the character disturbing them. The effects of the spores can be avoided with only a DC 12 Fortitude save (instead of the normal DC of 15). A DC 15 Knowledge (dungeoneering) check identifies the mold for what it is.

Creatures. Hiding in the fireplace on the north side of the room are a pair of harpies. When the PCs enter the room, they fly out from hiding to attack. At first, they both try to use their captivating song to hamper the PCs while moving to attack any that resist. The harpies know about the danger of the yellow mold, and avoid disturbing the table.

Harpies (2): hp 31 each; Monster Manual 150.

Treasure: Hidden in the back of the fireplace is a large chest. The chest is securely locked but can be opened with a DC 25 Open Lock check or the key from area 1. Inside are a number of moldy dinner outfits, 2,000 gp, two pairs of turquoise earrings worth 500 gp each and two potions of cure moderate wounds, in addition to the valuables in

The chest, the silverware on the table is worth 5 gp per set, for a total of 10 gp. The crystal goblets are worth only 1 gp for a total of twelve. The tin dinner plates are worthless.

20 CLOSET (EL 1)

This small closet contains little more than rags and trash.

Dire Rats (4): hp 5 each, Musiker Manual 64.

21 CLOSET

UPPER DUNGEON

Built ages ago by Gygax the first level of the dungeon beneath Castle Mistlmare has fallen into disrepair. Unless otherwise noted, all of the walls, ceilings and floors of this level are made from stone masonry. The doors are made of wood. While most of them are stuck (requiring a DC 16 Strength check to open), they are not locked. Most of the chambers are dark as their inhabitants do not need light to see.

22 GYGAX STATUE

Standing along one wall of this chamber is an ancient stone statue covered in dust and cobwebs, though its features are clear. The carving depicts a powerful-looking human wizard, his arms held out to cradle an unseen gift.

This chamber contains a set of stairs leading up to area 13 above. If the kobolds in that chamber have not been dealt with, they charge down the stairs to attack anyone in this room. Both of the doors leading out of this chamber are stuck but not locked.

Treasure: The statue of Gygax hides a valuable treasure. At its base is a small inscription that reads, "The orb is the key." Its arm and hands are perfectly weighted, so that if the stone sphere from area 37 is placed in its grasp, the statue will open as does a section of its chest revealing a hollow cavity. Inside this hollow is an ancient longsword wrapped in oil cloth and a scroll of invisibility. If the PCs do not have the stone, the statue can be smashed open (hardness 8, hp 55).

23 CRYPT (EL 3)

Four stone pillars support the vaulted ceiling of this chamber. Thick sheets of cobwebs and dust hang between them, obscuring the far side of the room. A faint crunching noise can be heard echoing from the far side.

Creatures: A pair of ghouls lurk in this ancient crypt, eating an unlucky kobold. The ghouls attack any who disturb their meal.

Ghouls (2): hp 13 each. Monster Manual 118

24. GUARD ROOM (EL 4)

A large table is turned on its side near the center of this squat chamber, with small piles of rubbish and debris scattered around it.

This chamber is one of a number of guard chambers manned by the kobolds to protect their lair and chieftain.

Creatures: Along with the four kobolds in this room, there are also two kobold bodyguards. If the PCs enter this chamber from the west, the kobolds hide behind the table and use it for cover while attacking with slings before engaging in melee. If the PCs enter from another direction, they can easily surprise the kobolds (who only watch the west).

Kobolds (4): hp 4 each. Monster Manual 161

This chamber contains a stone well in one corner. The well extends for 20 feet before ending in a pool of clear water. A rope dangles into the well, tied to an iron spike driven into the wall and connected to a wooden bucket. The water in the well is safe to drink.

26. KOBOLD BARRACKS (EL 2)

Three crude bunk beds are stacked into the corners of this room, while heaps of garbage, many old bones and ruined clothing, cover the floor.

Creatures: This room is one of the barracks for the kobold tribe. Since the kobolds sleep in shifts, this room is always occupied. When the PCs enter, two of the kobolds in the room are playing dice in the middle, while the other four are sound asleep. With a shriek, the gaming kobolds draw their weapons and attack, waking the other four.

Kobolds (6): hp 4 each; Monster Manual 61.

Treasure: One of the kobolds found a bag of devouring during his exploration and, mistaking it for a magical bag, has put all of his loot inside. Currently all that remains is 3 gp and a small amber gemstone worth 100 gp. The bag can be found with a DC 10 Search check.

27 AUDIENCE CHAMBER (EL 6)

Five doors enter this chamber from various directions. In the center of one wall is a door that is a stone bed.

This is the audience chamber of the kobold chieftain. He rarely leaves this room, out of fear that Bargle might come to issue him orders and mistake one of his minions for the chieftain, thus dethroning him.

Creatures: Sitting in this chair is a fierce kobold wearing a necklace of silver bones. The kobold chieftain is probably aware of the PCs by the time they reach this chamber and thus unsurprised. As such, he has a pair of kobold bodyguards and four other kobolds here to protect him. The kobolds attack the moment the PCs enter the room.

28 CLOSET

The door to this chamber is not locked, but the edges are sealed with bits of cloth. A DC 10 Listen check at the door reveals a faint singing noise coming from the other side. Once the padding is removed the singing is automatic. This chamber contains a magic and that the kobold chieftain found no treasure.

Treasure: Inside this small room is a silver urn that continuously sings an old ven lullaby. The urn is worth 200 gp, but anyone carrying it takes a 10 penalty on Move Silently checks. The urn has the ability to put the statue in area 43 to sleep. A dispel magic causes the urn to cease its singing for 1d4 rounds.

29 CHIEFTAIN'S BEDROOM (EL 2)

The door to this room is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to open. The gold key possessed by the kobold chieftain in area 28 opens this door.

This small chamber contains a simple bed and a stout wooden chest. A repulsive scent hangs thick in the air.

This is the bedchamber of the kobold chieftain. Although he rarely uses it for sleep, he does keep some valuable treasure in his chest, protected by a trap. A DC 20 Search check of the room uncovers a copper key hidden under the bed. This key opens the chest without setting off the trap.

Trap: Anyone attempting to open the chest is attacked by a poisoned needle that springs out of the lid.

Poisoned Needle Trap. CR 2; mechanical; touch trigger; repair/reset; lock bypass (Open Lock DC 30); Atk +25 melee (1 plus poison, needle); poison (greenblood oil, DC 13 Fortitude save resists (poison only), 1 Con/1d3 Con); Search DC 22, Disable Device DC 17.

Treasure: Inside the chest is 800 gp, 250 gp, a small emerald-studded silver bracelet worth 300 gp, and a wand of detect magic (42 charges). There is also a note from Bargle, ordering the kobold chieftain to be on the lookout for adventurers and to make sure not to allow them to proceed to the lower dungeon level.

30 GUARD ROOM (EL 4)

This chamber is identical to area 24, except that one of the kobold bodyguards carries a potion of gaseous form. The kobold does not know the function of the potion, and dares not drink it.

31 KITCHEN (EL 1/2)

A large fireplace stands in the north wall of this room, with a spit over the open flames. The carcass on the spit looks suspiciously like that of a dog.

This is the kitchen for the tribe of kobolds. There are few provisions here, with the tribe instead relying on what food their scouts on the surface can find. The rusted pots and pans in this chamber are of little value.

Creatures: A pair of kobolds tends the fire in this chamber, preparing meals for the rest of the tribe. While one wields a long cooking knife instead of a spear (dealing 1d4+1 points of damage) the other grabs the hot spit off the fire and attacks with it (dealing 1d4+1 points of damage plus 1d4 points of fire damage). They charge any intruders.

32 MESS HALL (EL 3)

Two long tables dominate this chamber, around which sit a dozen broken and battered chairs. Scraps of old meat, broken bones, and rotting elfflowers litter the floor.

This chamber is the mess hall, used by the kobolds to eat their meals. The floor in this room is covered in greasy rotting leftovers increasing all Balance and Trumble DCs by +2.

Kobolds (8): hp 4 each, Monster Manual 161.

Treasure: One of the tarnished sets of silverware in this room is actually made

33 KOBOLD BARRACKS (EL 4)

This chamber is identical to area 26, except that there are only two bunk beds here instead of three. Directly south of this chamber is a set of stairs that descends to the second level of the dungeon, ending in area 57.

Creatures: Two ordinary kobolds are resting in this room, along with a pair of kobold bodyguards, who are busy playing a game involving a rat, an apple core, and a pair of sticks.

Kobolds (2): hp 4 each, Monster Manual 161.

Elite Kobold Bodyguards (2): hp 22 each, see area 24.

Treasure: The wager between the kobolds amounts to 27 gp and a piece of blue quartz worth 10 gp.

34 WARNING

This chamber is full of bones and a large scroll of parchment is written on the south wall.

This room is used as a garbage pit for the kobolds. Any character who spends more than 1 round in this room must make a DC 10 Fortitude save or be sickened for 1d4 minutes. The writing on the south wall is in Draconic. It reads, "Old bugs this way—keep out!"

While the southern door is not locked, it leads only to a small chamber and another door. That door is locked, requiring a DC 30 Open Lock check to open.

35 PILLAGED STATUE (EL 4)

This ruined chamber has a cracked and broken statue that looks like a wizard.

The statue in the southwest corner is similar to the one in area 22, but its contents were looted long ago when the statue crumbled. The top half of the statue lies in ruin around its base. The stone orb used to open it is nowhere to be found.

Creatures: A pair of oil beetles reside in this room, and move to attack any who enter. These 3-foot-long red and-black beetles bear strange subelike stalks on their backs and large snapping mandibles.

Oil Spray (Ex) As a standard action, an oil beetle can spray a jet of caustic fluid through a special nozzle on its back. This requires a ranged touch attack. Anyone hit by the fluid must make a DC 14 Fortitude save or become sickened with painful blisters. The victim receives a new Fortitude save each day to overcome the infection, which can be treated using the Heal skill. The blisters can also be cured with a remove disease or similar effect. The save DC is Constitution-based and includes a +2 racial bonus.

36 TRAP ROOM (EL 2)

The north, east, and west doors of the western door are the smeared remains of a gigantic bug, its pulverized body surrounded by a slippery substance.

Trap: Directly in front of the western door is a pressure plate that causes a stone piston to descend from the ceiling and crush anything underneath it. The trap is triggered by anyone attempting to open the door, which itself swings inward toward area 37.

Stone Piston Trap: CR 2; mechanical, location trigger, automatic reset; Atk +10 melee (4d6, stone piston); Search DC 20; Disable Device DC 20.

37 BEETLE LAIR (EL 6)

Mounds of earth and stone are piled in this room, partially obscuring a stone chest.

Creatures: This is the primary lair of the oil beetles. Four of the dangerous vermin are in this chamber at all times, keeping watch over a cluster of eggs in the corner. They attack any who enter this room. Due to the upturned earth and stone, all of the squares in this room are considered difficult terrain.

Oil Beetles (4): hp 16 each, see page 25.

Treasure: The stone chest in the corner must be unburied before it can be opened. This requires a total of 5 minutes worth of work without looking (that time with them). Inside the chest is 500 gp, a stone orb (used to open the statue in area 24) and a pair of boots of the hind.

38 GALLERY

A faded tapestry hangs on the south wall of this ruined chamber, depicting Castle Mistmere as it once was, a beacon of strength and order.

39 BEETLE CHAMBER (EL 4)

The set of stairs leading up to the ruins above is this room's only notable feature.

The stairs in this room lead up to area 16 in the ruins above.

Creatures: A pair of oil beetles attacks any who enter this room.

40 PIT TRAP (EL 3)

Trap: This entire room is one gigantic pit trap, placed here by the kobolds to keep the vermin to the north out of their area. Any creature walking through the center of the chamber sets off the trap.

Spiked Pit Trap: CR 3; mechanical, location trigger, manual reset; DC 20 Reflex save avoids; 20 ft. deep (2d6 fall); multiple targets (all targets in the room);

Treasure: A kobold skeleton lies at the bottom of the pit with a Small +1 wooden shield still strapped to its arm.

41 STAIRS

A single set of stairs descends from this chamber to the second level of the dungeon, ending just north of area 55. Scrawled on the wall in Draconic is the crude kobold phrase "Use the other stairs Bargle's orders." Although there is nothing dangerous about these stairs, Bargle prefers that the kobolds come to meet him by using the stairs near area 47.

42 GELATINOUS CUBE (EL 3)

Off to one corner of this room a number of glittering gold coins can be seen, apparently floating in the air.

Creatures: A gelatinous cube sits in this room. The coins are actually suspended inside of it, and anyone who attempts to grab them without noticing the cube with a DC 10 Spot check is engulfed.

Gelatinous Cube: hp 34, Monster Manual 203.

Treasure: Once the cube is slain, the few coins inside it can be retrieved. There are a total of 15 gp and 12 sp inside it.

43 HIDDEN TREASURY (EL 2)

The door leading into this chamber is hidden and can only be found with a DC 20 Search check.

With a low grinding noise the ancient stone door slides open, revealing a passageway choked with dust and cobwebs clearly unused for quite some time. Just inside the door, a number of musical notes are carved into the wall.

Trap: A statue of Gygar standing in the chamber is actually a magical trap that can be deactivated by playing the tune inscribed on the wall. Playing this tune requires a DC 20 Perform check. Alternatively the singing arm from area 28 sings the same tune and makes the check automatically. If the correct tune is played, the statue is deactivated for 1d6 minutes. If an incorrect tune is played, or no music is played at all, the statue attacks the closest intruder with fiery rays one round after they enter the room. The statue continues to fire one ray each round until the correct melody is played or the intruders finally leave the room.

Scorching Ray Trap: CR 3; magical; location trigger; automatic reset; Atk +3 ranged touch; spell effect: scorching ray; 3rd-level wizard, 4d6 fire; Search DC 20, Disable Device DC 27.

Treasure: Both of the iron chests in this room are locked and bolted to the floor. They can be opened with a DC 20 Open Lock check. One chest contains ancient leather bags full of coins, one with 1,000 cp, two with 100 sp, two with 100 gp, and one with 50 pp. The other chest contains a Small +1 chain shirt, 2 potions of cure light wounds, a scroll of fireball, and a scroll of protection from evil.

44 SPIDER DEN (EL 4)

Thick webs are strung between the floor and ceiling of this small chamber, obscuring the corners of the room.

The webs in this chamber hamper movement. Anyone wishing to move through them must make a DC 10 Strength check or a DC 15 Escape Artist check. Success allows the character to move at half speed. The spiders can move freely through their webs.

Creatures: This room is home to a number of monstrous spiders. When they normally hunt the kobolds and beetles, they are always on the lookout for a fresh meal. They attack anyone who enters this chamber and are drawn to investigate any disturbances in the hallway.

Medium Monstrous Spiders (3): hp 11 each, Monster Manual 288.

45 HANGING FOOD

Thick strands of webbing hang from the ceiling of this chamber, some of which contain small cocoons of silk. Tattered armor, rotting flesh, and yellowed bones can be seen protruding from some of these bundles.

This is where the spiders store their meals, allowing them to ripen until they are ready to be eaten. Fine silk strands go from this room to area 44, alerting the spiders there to any intrusion here.

Treasure: A DC 20 Search of the corpses here reveals a pair of small belt pouches. One pouch contains 25 cp, while the other contains 4 cp and a tiny green quartz worth 10 gp.

46. DEAD EXPLORER

Eighteen years ago, an elf explorer fell victim to one of this dungeon's numerous dangers, stumbling all the way to this chamber before he perished. Written in even on the wall above the adventurer is the phrase, "Beware yellow mold."

Treasure: While most of his gear has rotted away, his masterwork longsword and spellbook still remain. The spellbook contains the spells detect magic, magic missile, and sleep.

47. ALCOVE

A crystal statue stands in this alcove, bearing a striking resemblance to Bargle. The statue glowers out at any who would pass beyond it to the stairs leading down.

The statue is heavy and of little use. The stairs descend to area 49.

48. RAT DEN (EL 3)

One corner of this small, unused chamber is a nest of torn bits of cloth, bird bones, and broken weapons.

Creatures: A host of dire rats nest in this chamber, scavenging from the kobolds for food. They rush out from their nests to attack if disturbed in any way.

Dire Rats (4): hp 5 each, Monster Manual 64.

Treasure: Hidden in the bottom of the dire rat nests is a finely crafted masterwork cold iron shortsword. The weapon can be found with a DC 15 Search check.

LOWER DUNGEON

Originally a small subbasement of Castle Mistamere, this level has been greatly expanded by Bargle. All of the creatures on this level are loyal to him, recruited specially to guard him and his work. Unless otherwise noted, all of the walls, ceilings, and floors of this level are made from stone masonry and all of the doors are made of strong wood. None of these doors are stuck, and few are locked. Most of the chambers are lit by sputtering torches or simple lanterns hung from the ceiling.

49. GUARD ROOM (EL 3)

This small chamber bears a stone bench along the far wall. A single door exits this chamber while a passageway leads to stairs going up.

The stairs in this room rise up to the first level of the dungeon, ending in area 47.

Creature: A single ogre guards this room and is under orders to slay anyone other than the kobolds or Bargle himself. If he detects intruders, the ogre bellows a warning to the ogres in area 51 and attacks.

50. OGRE BARRACKS (EL 3)

Creature: Unless the alarm has been raised, this chamber contains a sleeping ogre whose loud snores give him a -5 penalty on Listen checks. If warned, he is instead only pretending to be asleep and springs up to attack the moment any character draws within reach.

Ogre: hp 29; Monster Manual 199.

51. OGRE DEN (EL 6)

A gigantic table sits in the middle of this room with huge tree stumps around it for chairs. The carcass of a large boar rests in the center of the table, flies buzzing merrily around it.

This room is the primary den for Bargle's ogres. Three of the brutes are here most of the time eating, drinking, or gambling. The table in this room is nearly 5 feet high and Medium or smaller characters can duck underneath to gain cover from the ogres.

Creatures: If warned of the PCs' approach, the ogres are waiting for them in this chamber with weapons drawn. Just the PCs are enjoying their meal and must stand up and draw their weapons on the first round of combat.

Ogres (3): hp 29 each; Monster Manual 199.

Treasure: Aside from the 5 gp carried by each ogre, one of these ogres wears a silver amulet with a "B" inscribed on the front. The amulet is worth 25 gp, but more importantly anyone wearing it is not attacked by the statues in area 53 or area 59.

52. STORAGE

Large crates, sacks, and barrels are stacked in this small room. A wooden door in the southeast corner stands ajar.

This chamber is used to store all of Bargle's stolen provisions and contains a secret door requiring a DC 30 Search check to locate. Behind it is a small chamber hiding another secret door which also requires a DC 30 Search check to locate. Inside this hidden chamber is a small sack containing 50 gp as a ruse to get intruders to turn back before finding the second door.

53. TAPESTRY ROOM (EL 2)

A huge tapestry dominates the eastern wall of this room, a wall but obscuring a small passageway behind it. The tapestry depicts Bargle looming like a giant over the ruins of Castle Mistamere with all the surrounding lands set ablaze.

The tapestry hangs just a foot above the floor, making it nearly impossible to bypass it without disturbing it. The tapestry radiates moderate illusion and transmutation magic.

Creature: Bargle set up this tapestry to stop would-be intruders. If the tapestry is touched without first saying "All Hail Bargle," a 6-foot-tall crystal statue in the likeness of Bargle steps forth from the tapestry and attacks while a magic mouth spell placed on it cries out, "Who dares invade my fortress?"

This bonus does not apply if the statue is required to speak or is touched.

Once set as a living crystal statue, appearance cannot be changed.

Treasures: The tapestry weighs 150 pounds and is worth 500 gp.

54 ALTAR

Altar is a painting of Bargle and numerous trinkets and offerings are spread around the base.

Bargle rarely has time to have an audience with all of his minions, instead allowing them to make offerings here for him to claim later. The door leading south out of this chamber is locked and requires a DC 15 Open Lock check to open.

Treasure: Bargle's minions leave few things of true value here on the altar. Currently there is 28 cp, 15 sp, and 4 gp spread around the altar, along with a dead rat, two human fingers, and a potion of cure light wounds.

55 GUARD ROOM (EL 3)

This room and its guardian are identical to area 49, save that the ogre possesses a tiny gold key used to disarm the trap in area 56.

56 BLADE TRAP (EL 4)

Trap: This column hides large blades that spring out if anyone enters the room. Tiny keyholes on the wall of the north and south corridors both allow the trap to be disarmed, and can be found with a DC 20 Search check. The trap can be disarmed with a DC 25 Open Lock check or by using the key from the ogre's pouch in area 55.

wa of this room. A faintly flickering torch is the only light source here, mounted on the north wall.

This chamber was once one of Bargle's studies, but since a pair of shadows moved in, he no longer uses it. As a result, the room has fallen into disrepair. The staircase to the west leads up, ending south of area 33.

Creatures: While the shadows are on friendly terms with Bargle, they attack any other creatures who enter this room, pursuing them as far north as areas 55 or 58 if they flee.

Shadows (2): hp 19 each, Monster Manual.

Treasure: On a table between the two chairs is an old book, forgotten here by Bargle. Titled The Flow of Fear and Flame, the tome covers all sorts of magical theories and gives a +2 circumstance bonus on Knowledge (arcana) checks if referenced. It is worth 400 gp.

38. PIT TRAP (EL 4)

A large stained rug covers the center of this otherwise empty chamber.

The door on the north side of this room is locked, requiring a DC 25 Open Lock check to open. The one-way door in the west wall of this chamber can be found with a DC 25 Search check, but cannot be opened from this side.

Trap: The center of this room contains a large pit trap, designed to open when more than 200 pounds of weight is applied to it. The rug is affixed to the trap door. Once sprung, the trapdoor closes one round later, trapping those in the pit inside. If open, the trapdoor can be kept from closing with a DC 15 Disable Device check.

59. STATUE GALLERY (EL 6)

Six statues flank this long hallway, three to a side. Each one appears to be Bargle, his hands raised as if casting a spell.

Creatures: Four of the statues in this long hallway are crystal living statues. They move to attack only when a character reaches the middle pair of normal statues. A DC 15 Spot check notices their movement before they strike, avoiding surprise.

Living Crystal Statues (4): hp 42 each; see page 29.

60. CHAMBER OF DOORS (EL 3)

Three doors lead out of this rectangular chamber: two to the south and one each to the east and west. A booming voice calls out from the center of the room, "Fools, you have entered my inner sanctum. Guess correctly and you might live to face me."

This chamber contains one of Bargle's more dangerous traps. Three of the doors in this room are one-way, meaning they can be opened from inside the room, but not from the other side. Behind the southern doors are identical empty rooms, large enough to hold a single Medium creature. Nothing happens in these rooms until the doors leading into them are closed.

When the door to the east is closed, a secret door reveals itself and opens, leading to area 61, the lair of the doppelgangers. The door leading into this room cannot be opened until the secret door is closed. The secret door can be detected with a DC 20 Search check.

When the door to the southeastern room is closed, anyone inside this chamber is instantly teleported to the center of area 58, possibly causing them to fall into the pit.

When the door to the western room is closed, a secret door reveals itself and opens, leading to area 63, the fake throne of Bargle. The door leading into this room cannot be opened until the secret door is closed. In addition, a trap door in the ceiling opens the moment the secret door is closed, dropping a human skeleton into the small room and making it look like the unfortunate explorer was slain. The secret door and the trap door can be found with a DC 25 Search check.

Creature: When the door to the southwestern room is closed, a trap door opens in the ceiling, dropping an ogre jelly into the room. Due to the tight space, the ochre jelly gets a +4 combat bonus as grapple checks until the door is opened. The trap door can be found with a DC 20 Search check.

61 DOPPELGANGERS LAIR (EL 5)

This room is the lair of a pair of doppelgangers. When the secret door from area 60 is opened, a small bell rings here, alerting them. They quickly go down the hall to investigate both taking on Bargle's form. Both speak in intimidating and condescending tones as they battle intruders. If they manage to defeat any lone characters, they quickly assume their victim's form and go to meet up with the rest of the PCs, only to betray them when facing the real Bargle.

Doppelgangers: 2; hp 12 each; Monster Manual 69.

Treasure: Underneath one of the beds is a small chest containing 200 gp and costume jewelry worth 100 gp (although it appears to be worth much more to anyone failing a DC 15 Appraise check).

62 FAKE BEDROOM

This chamber is made to appear like Bargle's bedroom. Inside the chest, which is unlocked, are a number of robes sized for a human, an extra pair of leather boots, and a pair of potion vials. While both are labeled "extra," they in fact contain a deadly poison (arsenic; DC 13 Fortitude save resists 1 Con; +8 Con, which can be identified with a DC 20 Craft (alchemy) or (poison-making) check).

Atop the table are a number of rather amateurish notes concerning gardening, skirmish warfare, and politics (none of which interest Bargle much). The maps are simple sketches of the region.

Treasure: The only real thing of value in this room is the silk bedding, which is worth 50 gp.

63 FAKE THRONE ROOM (EL 3)

This room is the fake throne room of Bargle. It is designed to look like a throne room, but it is only a facade.

On the dais stands the imposing figure of Bargle, who glares at the party with contempt and asks, "Who dares disturb the mighty Bargle? You shall pay for your insolence!"

south wall of this room which can only be found with a DC 25 Search check. A DC 25 Open Lock skill check opens it.

Creature: This is another doppelganger, taking Bargle's guise. The doppelganger starts combat by pretending to cast a protective spell on himself (using Bluff) before moving in to attack with his dagger (Atk +6 melee, 1d4+1). If the doppelganger manages to defeat one of the PCs alone, he assumes the corpse's form and hides the body with the real Bargle in area 65. If he is about to perish, the doppelganger drinks a potion of invisibility and flees the room, heading back out through area 60.

Doppelganger: hp 23; Monster Manual 67.

Treasure: The fake Bargle's robes and gear are cheap copies, but his dagger is masterwork. He also carries a potion of invisibility unless he already drank it.

64 TAKE TREASURE

Two iron chests sit on the floor of this small room, both of which are open, displaying dazzling wealth inside.

Treasure: Each chest contains 100 gp painted to look like gold coins. Anyone handling the coins can attempt a DC 15 Appraise check to notice the forgery. Close inspection of the 100 reveals the fraud with a DC 20 Search check as well. Atop the piles of coins are a pair of crystal wands worth 10 gp each, a dozen glass vials containing colored water, and a gem-painted helm. Despite their appearance, none of these items are magical.

65 BARGLE'S THRONE (EL 7)

The heavy stone door swings open to reveal a chamber more opulent than the last. On the far side of the room across a polished slits a marble throne bedecked with glittering jewels sits Bargle the Infamous.

This is the real throne room. The pool in the center of the room is ten feet deep and quite cold. Bargle's throne is carefully weighted on tracks that allow it to slide away with the touch of one gemstone on the throne's left arm (a move action). This reveals a long, dark, winding passageway that ends in the mountains behind castle Mistmere. Inside this tunnel is a pressure plate that causes the throne to slide back into place immediately.

Creature: Sitting on the throne is Bargle the Infamous, his hand gently stroking his long black beard. By now he has probably been warned multiple times of the PCs' approach, and a small bell rings whenever the secret door leading into area 63 is opened, alerting him to the presence of intruders and allowing him to prepare and cast all of the spells noted. When the PCs arrive, he says, "I see you have finally pierced through all my ruses. I should have known fools such as you are not so easily tricked. The reward for your cleverness is death."

Tactics: In combat, Bargle uses his spell of summon monster V to call a Medium water elemental to the pool to protect him. He then casts his most powerful spells first, starting with wall of fire to divide the group and following it up with fireball. He moves about on his dais, retreating once the PCs draw too close, but never moves away from his throne. If dropped to 5 hit points or less, he presses the button on the throne's left arm and steps into the tunnel, causing the throne to slide back into place. If prevented from doing so, he drinks his potion of gaseous form and seeps through a crack into the tunnel behind the throne.

Development: Should Bargle escape through the secret tunnel, the PCs might try to follow him. Finding the right gemstone to trigger the throne requires a DC 30 Search check, although trial and error finds it in 2d6 minutes. The tunnel leads to the lair of a young red dragon named Venthavaxus that Bargle has befriended. The beaten magic-user might try to get the dragon to fight the PCs for him, or he might simply fly away, only to seek his vengeance another day, but further exploration is beyond the scope of this adventure.

Treasure: As he from Bargle's gemstone throne is spotted with various small jewels, including 30 red quartz worth 10 gp each, 10 pearls worth 50 gp each, 5 red garnets worth 100 gp each, and a single ruby worth 1,000 gp.

66 BARGLE'S BEDCHAMBER

The feather bed in this room is covered in the finest silk sheets and pillow. On one side is a polished wood table bearing a single lit candle. On the other side is a stone iron chest.

This chamber is Bargle's personal bedroom. He spends much of his time here dreaming of future conquests and even greater power.

Treasure: The furnishings in this chamber are quite fine and worth 300 gp. The chest contains the true treasures. It is locked and can be opened with a key hanging from Bargle's belt or with a DC 30 Open Lock skill check. Inside is a small bag containing 200 gp, a leather bag with 500 gp, and a tiny coffer holding a trio of pearls worth 100 gp each. These sit atop spare robes, boots, and other clothes. The chest has a false bottom that can be found with a DC 20 Search check once the chest is empty. Inside is a pair of gauntlets of ogre power, a rope of climbing, a wand of fluid person (20 charges), and two potions of cure moderate wounds.

CONCLUSION

After the PCs handle Bargle, the council of the town of Threshold is much relieved. The group is paid the full bounty of 1,000 gp if they kill or capture Bargle, but only half that amount if they simply drive him away. Unless slain, Bargle soon escapes from his prison cell, only to plot his revenge on the PCs at a later date. Bargle is not a magic-user to be trifled with and if allowed to live, he goes to no end to see his enemies punished. B

Jason Burmann says, "This adventure holds a special place for me as the first one I ever played. My first character, an elf named Thalrin, died in the dining hall while inspecting a tin plate covered in yellow mold after nearly succumbing to the harpies' song. In almost all cases, this adventure only uses monsters, spells, magic items, and treasure from the original Basic Game, with a few pulled from the Expert Rulebook and more modern sources. Special thanks go out to Gary Gygax, Dave Arneson, and Frank Mentzer for making these introductory rulebooks so fun, enhancing, and additive."

EBERRON, MID-LEVEL (6TH-12TH), URBAN

Ash falls on Sharn. In the frozen depths of a cruel winter, an inferno has consumed the lower quarters of the City of Towers. Like the tainted lungs of a dying dragon, the belly of the city has blasted the lofty spires with a poisonous cloud of ash and soot. To make matters worse, the city is locked in a blizzard, tainted by the smoke and transformed into a black storm of doom. The end cannot be far behind. Its coming foretold in the voices of the ravens that feast on the flesh of the dying. But for the Raven, the storm is merely a backdrop, a stroke of luck that makes the perfect setting for his greatest work. It will be a tale of love, treachery, passion, revenge, and murder.

"Quoth the Raven" is an adventure of murder, mystery, and dark horror for 5th-level PCs. This adventure is a seque-to "Chimes at Midnight" in DUNGEON #13 and is also set in Sharn, the illustrious City of Towers in the EBERON Campaign Setting. As the adventure is a murder mystery, you should read it carefully before running it so as to be familiar with its twists and turns.

ADVENTURE BACKGROUND

It has been a tough winter for the residents of Sharn. Two weeks past a blizzard has exploded in the City, spawning a fire of unprecedented proportions. Ashblack and Blackbones continue to burn bright, their foundries fueling the spreading flames. The inferno still rages below the city and the fire brigade, the watch, and most of Sharn's mages battle the blaze night and day. Plumes of smoke choke the sky and black snow falls in torrents from tainted clouds. The city is blanketed by a cold darkness.

Amidst this chaos a new killer stalks the populace. Weeks ago, anonymous tales of grisly murder began appearing at the offices of the Sharn Inquisitive. Hair-raising and horrific, these manuscripts quickly gained wide popularity among the readership. However, when it became apparent that these stories were not works of fiction, the fans' delight turned to gruesome fascination born out of dread.

Two dead in as many weeks, and this killer, who calls himself the Raven, is only getting started. His first work, "Tales in Blood," ended with the exsanguination of a professor of literature at Morggrave University. The professor's drained husk was found slumped at his desk, his epitaph scrawled in his own extracted blood. "Denise of the Cowardly Shifter" was cut off with the death of a spineless beasthide shifter named Mange. The shifter's body was found in an abandoned silver shop in Cassan Bridge called Shining Star Silver where his killer poured molten silver over his head, freezing his face into a silent scream.

The Raven sends his tales to the inquisitive piecemeal in six fragments, each offering clues to his identity and that of his prey. Each fragment describes the stalking of his "mouse" and preparations for their demise. The sixth and final fragment culminates in the story's climax, yielding the blood-soaked details of the victim's grisly end.

Already overburdened with the fires raging through the Cogs, the Watch lacks the manpower to hunt the Raven. Now the first fragment of the killer's next work, entitled "Stars in the Darkness," has appeared in this morning's edition of the Inquisitive. The city braces for more bloodshed.

But the grim truth behind the Raven's killing spree is darker than a simple homicidal frenzy. His targets seem random, but there is a method to his madness, and the pattern of his murders leads to the PCs themselves. Behind the scenes, an old enemy of the PCs has become their nemesis: Viktor Saint-Demian, his body broken, his sanity demolished, and his hunger for revenge as strong as ever, is the real mastermind behind the Raven's killing spree.

A few weeks after the PCs toppled him from the bell tower of the Temple of Aureon, Viktor found himself locked in Karvas Asylum for the Criminally Insane in Black Arch District, more commonly referred to as "Hell's Heart," there to spend the rest of his dismal days. Impotent rage festered inside him, but Viktor coiled his excitement in a veneer of repentance. The inquisitive eventually convinced the warden to allow him to tutor former students via correspondence from his cell. Viktor chose his protégé carefully.

A young man named Corbin Eldridge, abused by his alcoholic father before being turned out on the streets when the man drank himself to death, had been a pupil of Viktor's during his days as a celebrated inquisitive, when he volunteered his time teaching Gate of Gold's downtrodden children. Corbin bore the unmistakable stamp of genius, potent abilities developed over the course of his years on the mean streets of Sharn and a mind frayed enough by society's abuse to prove suitably delinquent for Viktor's fell purpose.

Saint-Demian wrote to the youth, whom circumstance had deposited in a janitorial position at Morggale University, where he hoped he might sit in on literature classes. Corbin aspired to dreams of literary greatness until a prickly professor scorned the young man, kicking him out of his classes. Viktor supplied a sympathetic eye to the boy's rage-filled letters, preying on Corbin's disturbed mind and steering him to show the world his talents by murdering the professor and chronicling it in beautifully crafted prose. The Raven was born, a dark lord of Sharn through whom Viktor could exact his revenge.

Black snow falls. The Raven's plans for the party are now close at hand.

ADVENTURE SYNOPSIS

The PCs learn of the Raven's killing spree and are asked to examine his latest manuscript fragment in hopes of stopping the madman before he kills again. The manuscript leads them to Mordreia (stage name "Star"), an elven vixen who table dances at the Gutterdust, a watering hole favored by adventurers bound for Xen'drik and other exotic locales. Shadowing or protecting Mordreia, the PCs are led astray by a former boyfriend stalking the dancer, a Valenar elf she brushed off some time ago named Alros Takman. After clashing with Jalros, the PCs learn the reason for his clandestine surveillance: he has sensed a sinister presence following her movements over the past few weeks.

The second piece of the Raven's manuscript leads the PCs to a mournful wasteland of decommissioned lightning rail boxcars on a lonesome stretch of muddy ground in Cogsgate. Here, the PCs clash with early warforged, most of them in the same sad state of decay as the menagerie of defective, damaged, or abandoned lightning rail carts they patrol. After avoiding or destroying the warforged guardians, clues in the Raven's writings lead the party to a coach of three slaughter-carts whose sides of beef are tainted with disease. The PCs find more than beef hanging on the carts' chains, discovering the dismembered remains of Mordreia, her flesh peeled away from meat and bone. A kyton servant of the Raven attacks (animating chains bearing maggot-infested sides of beef), and the PCs find a blood-soaked parchment after the fray. The third fragment of the manuscript describes the death of Mordreia in horrid detail, and also makes his real target clear. The PCs are his prey.

From there the PCs must track down the Raven before he brings his deadly tale to a close. If the PCs return to find "Mordreia," she has fled. She is none other than Vrynna the Changeling, a dangerous renegade tyrant and former associate of the infamous Viktor Saint-Demian. The party attempts to decipher the identity of the man behind the nom de plume by investigating the Raven's past killings. The clues lead the PCs straight to Viktor Saint-Demian, and the PCs journey to Hell's Heart to confront their old adversary.

With precious little time left, the party plays a deadly game of cat and mouse, doing their best to wrest Viktor's plan from the cagey criminal mastermind. The final showdown takes place in the old City Archives in an abandoned section of the High Wall's refugee district where the Raven holds the party's friends and relatives hostage.

ADVENTURE HOOKS

This entire adventure revolves around your party. Here are a couple of ways to pull the wool over their eyes at the outset and make them think they're on the outside of these bloody murders, looking in.

I am the Law: The Sharn Watch is at its wits' end containing the fires in Ashblack and Backbones before they spread upward and engulf lower Dura as well. The rampant looting and rioting accompanying the flames ensures they are short-staffed. If the PCs are well known for their heroics in Sharn, they may be approached by the Watch and deputized into a special task force dedicated to hunting down the Raven. This gives the party the chance to flash a badge and have law and order on their side.

Nowhere Left to Turn. Mange is a cowardly shifter and former lickspittle of Viktor Saint-Demain. He realizes he is being hunted by the Raven when he reads episodes of the ruler's latest story. With no friends to turn to, Mange instead contacts the PCs, offering to turn himself in if they will put him in protective custody. By the time the PCs receive his message he is already dead, and the party finds his body at the scene of his murder in Shining Star Silver in Cassan Bridge.

ONCE UPON A MIDNIGHT DREARY

Once the PCs take an interest in the Raven's kLungs, their first task is identifying his latest prey. The first fragment of "Stars in the Darkness" contains several clues. Anyone making a DC 25 Knowledge (local, or Perform, dance) check gleams hints pertaining to the nightclub Glitterdust in the manuscript fragment. A DC 35 on either check means they know a dancer there named Star, an elven woman of such incredible beauty that men go weak at the sight of her.

BLACK WINTER

The skymages usually see to it that Sharn's winters stay mild. However with fires raging in the Cogs, Sharn's City Council requisitioned the skymages to help deal with this catastrophe. Without the skymages asserting their power over the elements above, a blizzard descends on Sharn. What's worse, the coal-black smoke rising like an angry shade off the burning Cogs taints the storm with poisonous vapor. Soot and snow fall as one from the heavens, plunging the entire city into darkness. No storm like this has been experienced before on Khorvaire, and many residents of Sharn believe it is the sign of an oncoming apocalypse akin to Cyre's Day of Mourning.

The sun cannot pierce the storm's dark shroud, and the only light throughout the city comes from its everbright lanterns. The black snow also reduces the effectiveness of even this light source, cutting their area of illumination in half. The entire city suffers from constant snowfall, severe winds, and bitter cold. (Dungeon Masters Guide page 94) through out this adventure. In addition to a common blizzard, the blackened snow and floating ash threaten to choke anyone moving about the city. Every hour spent out of doors, a PC must make a DC 15 Fortitude save or suffer 1d6 nonlethal damage from the choking black soot.

Many places of business have shut their doors against the toxic storm. Rag-wearing prophets, their shaggy manes of wild hair laden with frozen ash and their faces blackened with soot, roam the streets crooning, "The Doom of Sharn is at hand!" and "the Second Mourning is upon us—we shall pay for our crimes of blood!" Apocalypse lurks around every corner. The Raven's kLungs only add to this growing sense of menace, and the atmosphere of Sharn is thick with fear. This sense of onrushing cataclysm should build along with the action of this adventure, and the storm (as well as the

VIA FOR WHO?

If your party did not play "Chimes at Midnight," some revision is in order to make "Quoth the Raven" enjoyable for them. The easiest fix is to replace Viktor Saint-Demain with your party nemesis and rework a past connection between this evil NPC and the Raven (akin to Viktor's connection to the kLungs). If this nemesis is at large in your campaign, simply design a short adventure or encounter where the nemesis can be killed or captured.

Viktor was slain in "Chimes at Midnight," so do not fear. Saint-Demain is a man of means, and he no doubt secured an expensive contract with House Joragson to raise him should he fall. He was returned to life and then shipped off by the authorities to Hell's Heart. If Vriana perished as well, the changeling could either be raised in a similar fashion, or you may substitute a different changeling operative, perhaps a member of the Tyrants hired by the Raven to serve as a patsy.

STAR OF THE GLITTERDUST (EL 10)

One of Sharn's finest nightclubs and a hotspot whose clientele ranges from dragonmarked scions and young nobles of Sharn's oldest families to underworld crime lords and rough adventurers, Glitterdust is a den of vice and temptation located atop Mark's Lower Gorge. Gorge dancers of both genders and most races sway alluringly to the red everbright globes as Brantby and the Jumping Horns (the club's resident band) fill the place with wild music.

The club wall is Breach glass and normally overlooks the breathtaking skyline of Sharn's cityscape. Now, with the city in the clutches of Black Winter, the glass is covered in clinging soot, and falling ash obscures the glorious towers beyond. Valhe Thrace, Glitterdust's owner, pays an accomplished illusionist to screen the glass wall with a phantasmal skyscape identical in appearance to Sharn's before the Black Winter began (the ultimate testament to wealthy residents' ability to ignore horrible events that impact the rest of the city's populace). For a more detailed account on the Glitterdust, consult pages 89-91 of the Explorer's Handbook.

Creatures: Mordreia is not at the club. Kidnapped a week ago on her way home in the deep of night, the elven dancer is being tortured to death over the course of days in Oriens's Graveyard. Vrin, the treacherous cycloptic changeling the PCs encountered in "Chimes at Midnight" is at the club in her stead, dressed to kill in Mordreia's alluring form.

Keep in mind that the PCs have no reason to suspect Mordreia is an imposter. If you wish to allow them Spot or Sense Motive checks against Vrin's Disguise check, do it in secret so as not to provoke the party's suspicions. Vrin plays his role with poissance and draws upon Mordreia's reputation for being suspicious of strangers to treat the PCs with disdain and throw trouble their way. The nightclub security consists of several burly hobgoblin bouncers in black glamersuits, and an ogre cooler named Urusk.

Urusk en joys his position as head of security at Sharn's sharpes. Club The brute dresses the part, wearing a fine brocaded cloak over his armor and a ruby-studded ring on one of his tusks. He purses a crush for Star, and if the PCs approach Vrin while he is performing in the club, the changeling rebukes them and creates a scene to draw Urusk's interest. The ogre snaps his fingers and four of the black glamersuited hobgoblins fall in at his heels as he strides up to challenge the party and "escort them out."

MORDREIA'S DOUBLE (EL 10)

Vrin is a crazed changeling and former Tyrant who specialized in larceny before Viktor Saint-Demian apprehended him. Months later, after Viktor was denied admittance into the Warning Guild, the inquisitive sprung the changeling to aid in his plan for revenge.

Life on the outside has not treated Vrin well. The Tyrants did not take his defection from their secretive cabal lightly. The doppeganglers hunt Vrin without rest, and he avoids detection by constantly shifting disguises. The first time Vrin received a message from the Raven, he went deeper underground hoping the crazed killer would lose him. The Raven proved too canny to evade, and threats of being skinned alive and fed to the crows eventually persuaded the changeling to aid him.

Vrin has never been sound of mind, believing (mistakenly) that he is descended from the cycloptic civilizations of Xendrik, but he is one of the most skillful impersonators in all of Sharn. Vrin studied Mordreia in secret for weeks in preparation for this role and adeptly keeps the PCs spinning their wheels while the Raven tortures the real Mordreia to death in Oriens's Graveyard. Vrin is aware of Jalros Takran's stalking of Mordreia and pretends to be terrified of the Valenar ranger.

If the PCs do not notice Jalros shadowing Mordreia, the changeling points it out subtly via hints like "I feel like I'm being watched," and "Sometimes the shadows on the rooftop across the street seem alive."

If Vrin's disguise is compromised at any time, he flees. While he is impersonating Mordreia, Vrin knows nothing beyond his part as a dupe in the Raven's schemes. He does not know about Oriens's Graveyard, or the Raven's plans at the Old City Archives. If captured he can only profess his deep-seated fear of the Raven. During this part of the adventure Vrin does not carry his weapons or armor.

STAR STALKER (EL 10)

Life has never been kind to Mordreia. During the Last War, her town in Cyre was brutally destroyed by a renegade band of Valenar turned bandit when the Cyran coffers ran dry and refused their pay. The outlaws put everyone Mordreia knew to the sword. They would have ravished her and left her for dead as well, but a ranger among them intervened on her behalf, slaying the rest of the bandits.

This was Jalros Takkain, and as many men do, he fell in love with Mordreia at first sight. Mordreia bore him no love, but stayed with him to survive the war-torn landscape of Cyre. The two fled to Breland just before the Day of Mourning. In the aftermath of the war, Mordreia was left without family, friend, or country. She left Takkain when she was offered asylum by the Brelish government. Takkain was not as lucky, and was sentenced to two years hard labor for his part in war crimes. His sentence reduced thanks in part to Mordreia's testimony, Jalros finished his sentence two weeks ago and immediately headed to Sharn to try and rekindle his relationship with Mordreia.

The dancer rebuked him, but as Jalros was about to stride away into the cold and lonely night he sensed someone watching from the shadows. Jalros began following Mordreia in hopes of discovering this sinister presence. Sadly, Jalros's hard prison term mingled with Mordreia's scathing rebuke damaged his spirit, and the ranger has taken to drink. On the night that the Raven abducted Mordreia and Vrinn replaced her, the elf was slumped unconscious over a bar stool.

He has noticed Mordreia acting strangely recently, but has no idea that she has been replaced. He continues to watch her, tightening his surveillance since the Inquisitive published the first section of "Stars in the Darkness." Every night he stalks out Mordreia's apartment in Oakbridge District, positioning himself across the cobblestone road in the upper level of an old mannequin factory.

The ranger hides among the mannequins in the northwest corner of the room. He harls his axes at anyone entering the room targeting humans first. He then draws his double scimitar and goes to work. If anyone attempts to parley with him, a DC 20 Diplomacy check (with a -10 penalty if made as a full round action) is enough to make Jalros pause and hear the PCs out. If they succeed in convincing him they mean Mordrea no harm he surrenders.

If defeated, or if he surrenders, Jalros is able to relay two important facts: someone has been following Mordrea for weeks (long before the first manuscript fragment of "Stars in the Darkness" was released) and Mordrea's actions in the past week or so have been a little uncharacteristic (this may be enough to get the party to scrutinize and out" Vrinu).

"Stars in the Darkness: Part Two"

DEEP INTO THAT DARKNESS PEERING

The PCs receive the second fragment of "Stars in the Darkness" two days after the first. A DC 20 Knowledge (local) or (architecture and engineering) check allows a PC to connect the images in the fragment to a lonesome patch of maddy earth in Cogsgate referred to as "Orien's Graveyard." A result of 30 or better on either check informs the PC that the Graveyard is run by a dangerous arachnid warforged named Spider. Lightning rail coaches irreparably damaged in the heated violence of the Last War, run down from overuse, or otherwise rendered inoperable find a home here on a stretch of lifeless ground.

WEB OF THE STEEL SPIDER EL 11

The quagmire of Orien's Graveyard runs red with rust bleeding from the sagging carcasses of rent steel rail carts. Old armored models from the days of the Last War are riddled with scorch marks and jagged tears. Others gutted by arcane fire victims of sabotage or derailment, are now nothing more than charred masses of twisted metal.

If the PCs played through "Chimes at Midnight" they pass the familiar wreckage of two rail carts crushed together, casualties of a brutal head-on collision.

Creatures: Before the PCs reach Mordrea's rail coach prison they must contend with the Graveyard's denizens. Several dozen warforged gathered in "Orien's Graveyard" after the accord at Thronethold. Many of these sad souls are as tattered and broken as the landscape of rail carts they wander. Most were maimed in the Last War and are missing one or more limbs. Others were abducted and abused or permanently disfigured by anti-warforged extremists in the days immediately following Thronethold, and now hobble about the Graveyard with half their heads caved in, or with missing eyes. Most hide from intruders or, rendered hopelessly insane by their torments, simply gibber at them nonsensically. But a few have banded together under the leadership of a petty tyrant with the lower body of an arachnid named Spider.

Spider serves as judge, jury and executioner in the Graveyard, though he usually dispenses with the first two. He hates all non-warforged with a passion, and sees the Graveyard as a treasured sanctuary where fleshbags do not interfere. Spider's gang includes a total of nine Graveyard Sentinels, all veterans of the Last War. They do not take lightly to intruders and prepare a deadly ambush in a bottleneck of rail carts near an old arcane crusher once used to reduce abandoned coaches to a brick of compacted metal.

ARACHNID CHASSIS (EMBEDDED COMPONENT)

These experimental components were developed for elite units in hopes of giving them an edge over the Valenar elves' mastery of stealth warfare. This embedded component replaces a warforged's lower torso and legs with a construct version of an arachnid form, giving the warforged an appearance not unlike a spider. Spider's son of this component is a gift from a kind warforged artificer contact who fashioned the arachnid chassis out of immobilized arms of other warforged. The chassis gives its wearer a climb speed of 20 feet and gives a +2 foot enhancement bonus to his base attack and speed. In addition, the chassis grants him an additional attack per round at his highest attack bonus with one of the arachnid's legs that inflicts 1d6 bludgeoning damage (plus the warforged's Strength modifier). This extra attack does not stack with any magical effect that grants extra attacks, such as a speed weapon or the haste spell.

Tactics: The sentinels and Spider take up positions as shown on the map after Spider uses his wand of shield of faith on the sentinels and himself. The sentinel standing at the far end of the gutted rail cart in the center of the map bears a common spider design blazoned on his chest. He pretends to be the Spider and parleys with the party, asking them their business in the Graveyard.

The other sentinels stand completely motionless behind cover and should not be visible to the party unless they have a ring of x-ray vision or make use of some other divination magic. Give the PCs a DC 25 Spot check to notice the crane's jaws positioned above the central cart.

If the PCs advance on the warforged calling out to them he cries out a signal to the others. If PCs step into the gutted cart, the sentinel manning the crane activates it and snatches up the cart as a standard action, and as a move equivalent action he drags it skyward 50 feet. On the following round he maneuvers it above the arcane crusher and drops it. Anyone caught in the crusher takes 6d6 bludgeoning damage and 4d6 electricity damage per round until they escape. A DC 25 Reflex save halves the damage. A DC 25 Strength check ends the crushing walls for a round, resulting in no one inside taking damage.

If some or all of the PCs avoid the gutted central cart by moving around it, the sentinels atop the stacked rail carts push the topmost one off the pile with a DC 15 Strength check (two of them do the third). Anyone below suffers 6d6 damage and is pinned beneath the wreckage (a DC 18 Reflex save halves the damage and avoids the pin).

Meanwhile, the three sentinels hiding in the armored cart behind axes at the PCs through the windows, and Spider stealthily sneak attacks from the shadows with his wand of scorching ray. If anyone rushes him he barrages them with his wand of fear. The warforged fights to the death.

Development: Once the PCs have defeated Spider and his cronies, it is a relatively simple matter to explore Oriin's Graveyard and find the location described in the manuscript fragment, a process that takes 1d4 hours.

SLAUGHTER COACH (EL 10)

The stench coming off of these three enclosed cargo carts is powerful enough to overcome even the all-pervasive clouds of choking ash. Inside, chains hang with rotting meat twisted and writhing in the still air as if of her own volition. The meat itself seems to slowly pulsate in the dim light, as maggots gather and slowly drip from it like falling snow.

Mordreia or what's left of her awaits the PCs in the third cart of a lightning rail cargo coach. The coach is comprised of slaughter-carts transporting sides of beef hanging on steel chains. The beef is infected with spores causing a hideous disease called slimy doom in any living creature that touches them. The hanging sides of meat oozle slime and maggots.

Creature: Razalind is a kytan and servant of the Raven. The female chain devil was formerly bound to serve a powerful cleric of the Dragon Below who resided in the Old City Archive before Corbin claimed it as his headquarters. The Raven made a deal with the chain devil, promising to save her master in exchange for one month of service, after which she is free to spread terror throughout Sharn. The Raven brought her to Oriin's Graveyard to watch him carve up Mordreia and charged her to await the PCs here and ambush them. Razalind detests her slimy rancid environs, and when the PCs arrive she is only too happy to deal with them and be free of the disgusting slaughter coach.

Tactics: Razalind awaits the PCs in cart three. She downs her potion of bull's strength as soon as she spots the party. If the PCs move toward cart three first, she ducks into cart two. Otherwise she simply observes the party as they enter and uses dancing chains to animate the chains in the cart the PCs occupy and attack (there are eight chains in each cart). If the PCs are in cart one or two, the chains bear the infected beef. As they strike the mutilated cow carcasses explode in a shower of rancid meat, maggots, and slime. In addition to suffering damage the target, and anyone standing within 5 feet, is splattered with meat-sludge and exposed to slimy doom (Dungeon Master's Guide 292).

As the PCs draw nearer to the cart where Razalind waits, she sprinkles dist. of disappearance on herself and continues to slash at the party with the cart's many razored chains. If detected, she activates her ring of blinking and attacks with her own masterwork chains, attempting to sunder any particularly effective weapons the PCs possess. The chain devil flees if reduced to 10 hp or less.

Development: The bits of skinned meat hanging from chains in cart three of the slaughter coach are not beef but rather Mordrem. The dancer's beautiful face and head of golden hair are the only part of her left unmarred by the Raven's implements of torture. A sheaf of bloodstained paper hangs in her mouth—the third fragment of “Stars in the Darkness.” Any confusion as to the Raven's pattern is cleared up after the first paragraph or two (which describe Mordrem's slow agonizing death and dismemberment) when the narrative becomes wholly concerned with the PCs. Feel free to generate your own handout for this section of the manuscript catered towards your PCs specifically. Describe their actions in chilling detail as if the Raven were breathing down their necks.

ALL MY SOUL WITHIN ME BURNING

When the party learns they are the Raven's target everything changes. Unless the party left a PC or two behind to watch Vinn or dragged “Mordrem” along with them to the Graveyard the changeling is long gone. Vinn, though more than a little crazy, is good at what he does, and he is sure to clean Mordrem's apartment of anything that could be connected to him. He drinks a potion of nondetection and disappears for a day before the Raven summons him to the Old City Archives to play a further part in his dread plan.

The PCs receive the Raven's fourth manuscript fragment sometime during their investigations. Use this fragment to reinforce the idea that the Raven is hunting them, delivered in the beak of a large crow. The fourth manuscript fragment is short and contains a clue that becomes important in the Old City Archives.

TALES IN BLOOD

If the PCs wish to begin hunting the Raven, they have only a few clues. The obvious course of action is to investigate the earlier murders in order to get a better handle on their foe.

The first manuscript details the death of a half-elf professor of literature at Morgrave University named Lithanir Tassan. The Raven stalked him for five days before cornering the professor in his office after hours. There he tortured him throughout the night, and eventually the professor exsanguinated himself with a hideous pump-pen the Raven brought, writing both his own epitaph and transcribing the Raven's final chapter of "Tales in Blood," until he slumped over his desk, dead from blood loss. His pale corpse was discovered the next morning by his staff.

1. Gather Information check, the PCs meet up with Aletia Cardance, an aging half-elf beauty of a Librarian at Morgrave who Corbin often assisted after hours. He volunteered his time reshelving books in exchange for the right to pore through the classics in the wee hours of the evening. Cardance offers up one interesting clue about Corbin: "When he mis-shelved books it was always because he was using an older system of book organization not employed since the early days of the Last War."

A DC 30 Gather Information check leads the PCs to information on Corbin's upbringing at an orphanage in Gate of Gold district. The same one Viktor Saint-Demian was raised in, and where the inquisitive later volunteered his time as a porter.

DEATH OF A COWARDLY SHIFTER

Investigating the particulars of Mange's murder implies a connection to Viktor Saint-Demian. If your party did not play "Chimes at Midnight" then a DC 20 Knowledge (local) or Gather Information check unveils the shifter's past affiliation.

Mange was found splayed out on a table in Shining Star Silver, an abandoned silversmith shop in Cassan Bridge, where ironically Mange and a partner in crime named Grimgray beat the resident silversmith to death some time ago acting on orders from Viktor Saint-Demian. Mange represented himself poorly in Viktor's service and the inquisitive decided to get even through his proxy, the Raven. A DC 15 Gather Information check or a DC 15 Search of Shining Star Silver made by someone with the Investigate feat reveals that Mange was hiding out in a small tenement in Ashblack (room 102).

HUNTING HOUND (EL 9)

Run this encounter when the PCs enter Ashblack to look for Mange, sometime before they reach his tenement.

Entering the Cogs is like stepping into another world. The burned out regions are ash-covered wastelands where nothing stirs. The silence here is broken only by the distant alarm bells of the fire brigades and the echo of roaring flames.

Creature: The intensity and duration of the inferno has caused Inferna to become near coterranous with the Cogs in places. A powerful denizen of this plane, an enormous hell hound named Varislag, recently crossed over. The hell hound preys upon brave members of fire brigade who venture beyond the fire-line to rescue those trapped in blazing buildings. This excursion has provided Varislag with his most entertaining few weeks in years. He relishes the hunt, and as soon as Varislag detects the PCs moving in Ashblack, he stalks them, attacking when he perceives the PCs are off their guard.

MANGE'S TENEMENT (EL 9)

This ramshackle building leans drunkenly over the street as the fiery inferno continues to consume the neighborhood. Smoke pours from the building's upper-story windows like the exhaust of some massive furnace, and a brilliant orange light transforms objects in front of the windows into two-dimensional silhouettes. The fouled, searing air makes it difficult to breathe, and from within the building comes the ominous crackling of a raging fire.

Mange's tenement is wreathed in flames, and if the PCs wish to investigate they must brave the inferno. The fire spreads 5 feet every 10 rounds in the direction shown on the map. Anyone entering the tenement suffers 1d6 fire damage per round; this increases to 3d6 if they are in a square filled with flames), and must make a DC 15 Fortitude save as well or suffer 2d6 nonlethal damage every round from smoke inhalation. Ten minutes after the PCs arrive the tenement gives a final groan of anguish before collapsing, destroying all the evidence within. Anyone still inside is pinned and takes 5d6 fire damage per round until they escape.

Creature: A fell, fiery undead called a forgewraith stalks the tenement.

If the PCs head to Morgrave University to interview Lithanir Tassan's peers, students, and associates and investigate the crime scene, they turn up some interesting clues the Watch overlooked in their cursory examination of the case.

A DC 20 Gather Information check reveals one person with a possible motive to off the professor: a janitor at the University named Corbin Eldridge used to quietly sit in on Lithanir Tassan's lectures on creative writing. The professor recently discovered his presence and banned him from the class. With a DC

Development Inside a charred desk near Mange's smoldering bed the PCs find a note written by the shifter shortly before his death. He meant to send the note to the Watch (or even the PCs, if you used the adventure hook involving Mange), but got spooked when the Raven came for him and fled his apartment without it.

The letter begs the reader for help and protection. In exchange, Mange offers to give up information on several members of the criminal underworld. More interestingly, the letter refers to the nightmares visited upon him by the Raven, in which the killer accused the shifter of "betraying his master and leaving a great man's side on the eve of Wildnight." This is a direct link between the Raven and Viktor, if the PCs haven't inferred one for themselves yet.

In addition, a copy of an old philosophical treatise called "Disloyalty, Dishonor and Death" sits in the desk, as well with an inscription that reads "As one thing to ponder in these, your final days — Quoth the Raven."

A DC 25 Craft (bookbinding) or Search check (by anyone with the Investigate feat) allows a PC to note that the book is an antique taken from the collection of the Old City Archives located in the ruined quarter of High Walls District. The book is worth 100 gp. A DC 15 Knowledge (local, or Knowledge (history) check reveals that the Old City Archives is the only structure standing in Sharn that uses the order system of book organization Corbin mistakenly used to shelve books in Morgrave's library.

Ad Hoc Experience Award: If the PCs connect the dots to the Old City Archives on their own before they interrogate Viktor, give them experience as if they defeated an EL 10 encounter.

HELL'S HEART

Viktor does not wish the PCs to go to their death without enjoying their fear and frustration first. The connections between the Raven and Viktor are breadcrumbs purposefully left in order to draw the party to the asylum for a face-to-face with the devious master inquisitive.

As the party enters Black Arch, they become instantly aware of the district's purpose—repelling any invading force. The area is locked up tight with manned gates along most major avenues, fortified spires with black-iron barred windows and men-at-arms bristling with halberds and longwords.

A monolithic three-spire black stone stronghold puts the surrounding fortifications and guard posts to shame. Karvasi Asylum for the Criminally Insane's more common moniker of "Hell's Heart" is attributed to its inmates. The asylum houses some of Sharn's most dangerous and twisted criminal minds. Vicious killers with the blood of dozens of innocents on their hands, deranged madmen whose rampages left entire districts soaked in gore, sit in 10-by-10 cells with no windows.

A tall, imposing human named Dr. Lucard Karvasi runs the asylum. Lucard is a quiet man whose face barely moves when he speaks. He almost never blinks. Karvasi's sister is married to King Boranel's uncle and Karvasi has milked his family's favor in court to run the Asylum with little to no oversight. His strong ties to the monarchy also allow him to have criminals sentenced to death or life in prison commuted on psychological grounds and sent to his Asylum for "study and rehabilitation" instead. Karvasi's idea of "study and rehabilitation" makes what most of his charges did to their victims seem humane.

Viktor's body count does not come close to his neighbors' swaths of destruction, but his sharp mind and considerable talents prove he is more lethal than any other inmate in the asylum. After his first few excruciating "sessions" with Lucard Karvasi, he sensed a crack in the man's cool collected psyche, and a dark vestigial split persona gestating inside Lucard's otherwise disciplined mind.

Viktor named this submerged persona "Krader" and used his considerable skills at manipulation to nurture and draw forth this underlying personality hiding inside Lucard's sub-consciousness. Krader is an ugly thing. He enjoys Lucard's ministrations of pain upon the inmates, but despises the long hours the good doctor wastes in academic pontification. Krader wants his own arm at the reins, during which this drill creature isn't sure what exactly he would do, he's only certain it would be bloody and brutal. Viktor has promised to make Krader's dreams come true and it has afforded the inquisitive great power behind the scenes in the asylum.

When the PCs arrive, Lucard's cool exterior is in control and Krader dives deep below the surface on Viktor's instructions. A DC 15 Diplomacy check is necessary to secure an interview with Viktor, as Lucard does not normally allow any outside contact with his patients. Lucard agrees reluctantly only if the PCs make clear the threat posed by the Raven and convince him that Viktor may have information aiding in the serial killer's capture. In truth, Lucard only agrees in hopes that the Raven, another truly interesting specimen, will end up in his care once the party captures him. Lucard demands to be present with some of his orderlies during the interrogation to see that the PCs do not harm his patient (torturing his charges is a privilege he shares with no one).

INTERROGATING VIKTOR

Viktor is rolled into an examination room bound to a metal wheel chair. His hands are unbound, though his feet are chained to the chair at the ankle. The markings of any particularly grueling wounds he sustained at the hands of the PCs in "Chimes at Midnight" should be apparent. If he fell from the bell tower his body is twisted—the skeletal damage he sustained in the fall did not heal properly.

Viktor has every intention of delivering the party into the Raven's clutches, though he intends to make it hard on them at first just to watch them squirm. The true challenge of this encounter lies in getting the emotional upper hand on Viktor and baiting the disciplined inquisitive into giving up information on how to defeat the Raven. This is done by scoring enough Interrogation Points to push Viktor off balance or infuriate him.

Tactics: Viktor's first tactic is to play the "reformed criminal." He pretends his sessions with Karvasi healed his damaged mind and expresses deep remorse over the terrible actions he took last year, even apologizing to the PCs. He feigns complete ignorance as to the Raven's killing spree ("We sadly receive little news of the outside world in here"). Karvasi supports this statement ("Too many details from the outside may unbalance the fragile psyches of our patients"). Viktor claims he would be happy to help the PCs end this new killer's reign of terror ("It is the least I can do to repay my debt to Sharn"). If the PCs accuse Viktor of some sort of connection with the Raven, citing evidence in his choice of victims (Mange) or the dreams mentioned in the Mange's letter, Viktor shrugs, saying, "My reputation has no doubt come to this madman's notice. Perhaps he sees his killings as a tribute to my misguided dalliance with crime last year, or worse yet, he is merely using me as a smokescreen to mask his true intentions." Roll a Bluff check for Viktor versus the party's Sense Motive check. If the party believes Viktor's ruse and engages his help they lose an Interrogation Point. If the PCs make the check and call his bluff, Viktor lifts his head to glare at the party, his eyes filled with cold rage, a sneer adorning his face. Grant the PCs one Interrogation Point. Either way the duel of wits begins. The PCs may earn (or lose) Interrogation Points as follows:

- For every clue they uncovered during their investigation granting them hints to (or outright knowledge of) Raven's identity or the location of his headquarters, grant the PCs an Interrogation Point. Viktor was very much looking forward to "solving" the case for them, and if they walk in armed with a bevy of clues the inquisitive seethes with anger.
- Anything the PCs do to cite their own acumen and skills as inquisitives perhaps strong when difficult cases they solved, or displaying awards or honors given to them by figures or organizations of note drives Viktor further into the depths of madness, granting them an additional Interrogation Point.
- Claiming Viktor could never catch the Raven himself turns the inquisitive's ego against his cat's paw and grants the party an additional Interrogation Point.

- Thanking Viktor for creating the Raven as the perfect adversary, and pointing out that when the PCs take the serial killer down they will be heralded as Sharn's greatest heroes, points out the terrifying possibility Viktor's hubris never allowed to creep into his plan. The possibility festers in the inquisitive's mind and earns the PCs an Interrogation Point.
- Pandering to Viktor's ego by bluffing him into believing the Korruberg Chronicle is interested in publishing his story (or something like that) throws the inquisitive off-balance and earns the party another Interrogation Point.
- Succeeding in intimidating Viktor earns the PCs an Interrogation Point once only.

- For every clue Viktor supplies the party they lose an Interrogation Point.
- When Viktor reveals the fact that the Raven has taken NPC relatives and friends of the PCs hostage have each PC make a DC 25 Will save. The party loses one Interrogation Point for each party member present who fails the save as Viktor enjoys their obvious horror.
- Every time Viktor humiliates the PCs through a strong roleplaying moment take away another Interrogation Point.
- If Viktor can provoke a PC to strike him, the party loses another Interrogation Point as their dependence on thuggery amuses the inquisitive and further convinces him of his own superior intellect.

Development: Kárvasi insists the PCs cast no spells on his subject ("magical meddling may do serious harm to his mind and unravel the painstaking progress I have made thus far"). If the PCs strike Viktor, Karvasi commands them to not to touch the inquisitive. He is furious at the party's mistreatment of his patient, but a DC 25 Diplomacy check mollifies him, and as long as the PCs do not harm Viktor again Karvasi allows the interrogation to continue. If the PCs insist on using force, Karvasi commands six of his orderlies to detain the party (use the statistics for the hobgoblin bouncers on page 38), and calls for a party of soldiers from a nearby guard post in Black Arch. Otherwise Karvasi pretends at clinical detachment and quiet study of Viktor's responses to the interrogation, but secretly is riveted by the game of cat and mouse unfolding before him and does not intervene.

No matter what, Viktor eventually reveals the Raven's location to the party, as he hopes the PCs to rush to their doom. He also takes great pleasure in revealing the fact that the Raven has kidnapped their close friends and relatives and holds them at the Old City Archives. He only offers up the following information if the PCs score the requisite number of Interrogation Points:

1-2: Unshakable Viktor is nonplussed by the PCs and offers up no further information beyond the fact that he and the Raven are old friends.

3-5: Off-Balance Viktor is knocked enough off his guard to be coerced into revealing Corbin's identity, if the PCs do not know it yet. In addition he reveals that the writing is just as important as the killing to Corbin.

6-8: Thrown Viktor is highly agitated by the PCs and lets slip a few tidbits of useful information, such as the password to bypass the stone golem. He also begins to hum the tune played in area 3 of the Old Archives to taunt them and when asked about it mumbles something about "being deaf."

9-10: Cracked Viktor's veneer of sanity is shattered and he begins spewing clues. Besides those listed above, he lets slip that the Raven will do nearly anything to save the original manuscript of his writing (see area 7 of Old City Archives for further details), and locks gazes with the PC whose NPC is held hostage in area

6 of the Archives, snarling, "Your friend will be crushed flat in a few hours!"

ON THIS HOME BY HORROR HAUNTED

The Ravens trap is set. While the PCs have been painstakingly hunting the killer, Corbin's been busy kidnapping the people the party cares about. Choose these four hostages carefully. The Raven selects those the PCs hold dearest such as close friends, lovers, patrons, and family members. Each NPC now stands in peril, bound in four separate death traps from which the PCs must rescue them.

As the PCs approach the Archives they find that the High Walls District is aptly named. Towering stone barricades, pitted and cracked from neglect, cordon this miserable ghetto off from the rest of Sharn. Used as a detainment camp for refugees, foreigners, suspected terrorists, and undesirables during the Last War, High Walls festered with misery, destitution, and violence. Since the Last War ended, little has changed.

A group of rag-swathed children shiver in the doorway of a building as black snow accumulates on the stairs below them. A rail thin old Cyran man wearing only a loincloth and his waist-length ash-caked beard staggers along a cracked walkway below a flickering everbright lantern. He mutters to himself, his face twitching freakishly as misersers down the lane.

When the old man sees the PCs he turns his soot-blackened face their way and shouts, "I saw the Mourning with these eyes. I stood on the deck of the Thunder Rider in Kraken Bay and watched the mist roll across the city. I see it again now! Sharn will share our terror! You will all die squirming!" The mad Cyran's raspy laughter echoes eerily off the distant walls.

THE OLD CITY ARCHIVES

When Gaifar I took control of the Five Nations and sent a force to rebuild the shattered city of Sharn, the engineers were surprised to find an impressive marble structure still intact among the ruins. Shattered when Tarkanan's retreat brought the War of the Mark to its doorstep, Sharn lay desolate and abandoned for five hundred years. Most districts were razed to the ground by the armies of House Cannith, and beneath few structures survived, but a large temple to Aureon in present-day High Walls stood unscathed.

Gaifar declared the temple would be maintained as the City Archives, and important documents and a municipal collection of valued books were kept within "the oldest building in Sharn." The Archive's shrine to Aureon is one of the oldest in Breland, and its library contains books and scrolls preserved from the fall of the Dhakaam Empire when Sharn was called Duur-Shaarat ("Bade of Sorrows"). Decades ago a thriving printing press moved into its second floor, and an exhibit on Sharn's notable historical figures moved into the section of the building once used as an abbey.

The abandonment of this landmark structure in favor of zoning High Walls into a ghetto for suspicious residents is a testament to the paranoid fear inspired by the widespread violence of the Last War. The city council neglected to even transfer most of the contents of the Archives in their haste to build the ghetto's walls and keep members of their own populace prisoner.

General Features: The outer walls of the building are 3-foot-thick marble. The interior floors and walls of the second and third level (as well as the spiral staircase ascending to them) are made of termite eaten wood and rotted through in many places. There is no source of light inside the Archives.

1 ENTRYWAY (EL 13)

A great marble stair ascends to a circular terrace where large oak doors are barred against the black snow and howling wind. The terrace is shielded from much of the storm by a faded blue marble carving of Aureon's draconic visage, ashysnow heaped upon his snout. In respect to Aureon's wife Boldel and his brother Onatar, small sculptures stand to either side of Aureon's. The doors are flanked by two large statues, one is that of simple peasant woman holding a basket of freshly baked bread, the other, a dwarven smith.

Old City Archives

One square = 5 feet

One of the reasons the Archives hasn't been ransacked by the desperate residents of High Walls is the fact that Aureon's temple is protected by his wife and brother. The statues flanking the doorway are in fact stone golems. Anyone making a DC 25 Spot or Search check outside notices the statues bear scours and cracks obviously not inflicted upon them by the ravages of time, but rather by combat. A DC 25 Spot check reveals an inscription in Draconic on the arch above the doors, well worn and obscured by a dusting of snow. The inscription reads, "Wisdom is the key to salvation." If someone entering speaks these words aloud in any language, the stone golems maintain their repose and allow them safe passage. Otherwise they attack.

Stone Golems (2): hp 55 each, Monster Manual 130

Development: If the stone golems are destroyed, a great crack resounds overhead and the three dragon heads above begin crashing down. Anyone on the terrace must succeed on a DC 20 Reflex save or suffer 6d6 damage and be pinned beneath the enormous stone carvings.

Ad Hoc Experience Award: The golems have taken a beating over the years from many parties of well-armed scavengers seeking to steal valuable treasures secreted inside the Archives. Only award the PCs half the experience they would normally get for defeating the golems, but also award them half the experience if they bypass them by speaking the inscription aloud.

2. GREAT HALL

This cavernous chamber is filled with white marble pillars and little else. The slightest sound echoes loudly through the chamber. An ornate marble staircase on the north side of the room leads up to the floor above.

From this area the party can hear sounds issuing from areas 3, 4 and 6. The whir of machines and the rhythmic ringing of metal on metal resounds in the printing press chamber above, an eerie melody played on the large organ in the shrine echoes through the doorway on the western wall, and a cacophony of voices murmurs within the eastern corridor. No Listen check is necessary to hear these sounds, though a DC 20 Listen check reveals the frantic cries of hostages in all three locations. A DC 25 check allows the listener to recognize the voices of each hostage, if they know all of them.

3. SHRINE TO AUREON EL VARIES

A great dome of stained glass above depicts Aureon as a wizened old man lecturing to a host of creatures great and small. Within, a stone altar to Aureon is framed by a massive organ, its pipes running up the western wall. An eerie melody plays as the keys are danced by theirelves.

Trap: The first of the Raven's death traps lies here. An NPC hostage is manacled by sturdy adamantite chains to the altar of Aurton. The heavy chains run into the altar's base where a series of complex pulleys and winches wind them up incrementally resulting in the gruesome drawing and quartering of the hostage.

As soon as the PCs enter the organ begins repeating the same phrase of music once per round. Each time the phrase finishes the winches pull the chains tighter, wrenching joints and stretching the victim's spine causing them to scream in anguish. Every round the organ also releases two belkers trapped within its pipes (see Creatures below). When the tune plays through the fifth time (at the end of the fifth round, the chains pull hard, drawing the manacles and any limbs entrapped in them) all the way to the base corners of the altar. This undoubtedly rips the hostage to pieces, spraying gore in all directions.

After the organ plays the phrase the third time several of the pipes begin spilling insanity mist (Dungeon Master's Guide 297) into the room. Every round after the third, everyone in the shrine must resist the effects of the airborne toxin. At the end of the fifth round organ plays its highest note. The pipe that plays this note is connected to a horn of blasting mounted on it. The blast of sonic force shatters the stained glass dome above and brings a hail of razor-sharp shards down on everyone in the room dealing 5d6 slashing damage (DC 25 Reflex save to avoid). Damaging the organ in any way causes the winches within the altar to immediately release tearing the hostage apart.

The only way to disarm the trap lies in the cryptic clue sent to the PCs by the Raven in the fourth manuscript fragment. The letters of the words of the poem are actually musical notes. The line of the poem that reads "ebbfadebedead" is the phrase being played over and over again. Any PC may make a DC 20 Perform check related to music (sing or any instrument) to realize the melody spells out the first line of the poem the Raven sent them. If "beggedeaf" (the second line) is played in any key the organ's ceases its lethal melody.

Adamantine Manacles: Hardness 20; hp 50; Break DC 30; Open Lock DC 35.

Creatures: Five belkers are trapped in airtight compartments in the organ. Each time the phrase begins in a new key one of them is released. The angry vaporous monsters pour out of the organ's pipes, appearing to be smoke or gas at first and then immediately attack the PCs and the NPC hostage fighting to the death.

Belkers (5): hp 38 each, Monster Manual page 27.

Treasure: The horn of blasting is attached to the organ in the upper northeast corner of the room. Assuming the PCs can reach it, it can be retrieved easily.

Ad Hoc Experience Award: If the PCs unravel the riddle of the poem and song and save the hostage's life in this manner, award them experience as if they defeated a CR 10 creature. If they use some other means, such as teleportation magic or picking the lock on the manacles, in time to save the hostage, grant them experience equal to a CR 6 creature.

4. HISTORICAL FIGURES OF SHARN (FL 8)

This room has been divided into several smaller corridors by long rows of display cases containing marble busts. Each display case has a small plaque that contains some information about the famous person depicted by the carving. A strange muttering sound fills this room, its source hard to pin down. At the far end of the room a narrow staircase winds down.

This corridor is lined with marble busts of Sharn's most notable personages throughout history. Villains such as the Lady of Plague rest beside great heroes like Pather of the Silver Crusade, Bryn, Founder of Breland, and Lord Hassur-Tan. Each tells their tale via permanent magic mouth effects. A circular alcove contains several more busts in niches lining a stone stairwell spiraling down to area 5. Halfway down the stairwell is one of the hostages. This unfortunate soul is entombed in the wall of the niche with only their head exposed (via a stone shape spell).

neck, slicing down and beheading them if any pressure is applied to the wall.

Guillotine Trap: CR 5; mechanically pressure trigger; no reset; no save; decapitation of hostage; Search DC 15; Disable Device DC 25.

Creatures: As soon as the PCs enter the stairs the Raven releases a switch. This opens two alcoves above the stairs and a hidden chamber below, releasing a gibbering mawther from each. The three creepy creatures flow up and down the stairs to attack the party their maddening gibbering drowning out the magic mouth exhibits.

Gibbering Mouthers (3): hp 42 each; Monster Manual 126.

Ad Hoc Experience: If the PCs save the hostage, award them experience equal to a CR 6 creature.

5. BASEMENT ARCHIVES

This gigantic complex of underground chambers is filled with nothing but row upon row of strongboxes and shelves brimming with official documents—edicts of the council, merchant's licenses, birth and death certificates, tax collection records, censuses, draft receipts, etc. Otherwise this area contains nothing of interest. You may use these archives to resolve some mystery in your PCs' pasts, or present any number of adventure hooks, or to offer information important to other adventures.

6. PRINTING PRESS (FL 11)

A deafening orchestra of gnashing machines thunders within this large room. Reinforced wooden flooring sags under the weight of a large printing press formerly used to mass-produce texts and chronicles. The press is a writhing forest of whirling gears, belts and cylinders. Heavy steel plates bearing the latest news from over thirty years ago hover over an elemental-powered conveyor belt bearing thick sheets of high-quality vellum. The plates periodically slam down on the vellum with crushing force.

Long ago, this printing press produced the Sharn Inquisitive's predecessor, the Dagger Ford Chronicle, and copied important textbooks for number of academies throughout the city. Now the Raven uses the press as a bloody deathtrap.

Trap: An NPC hostage is suspended above the press by a series of steel cables. Their veins and arteries are ridged with exsanguination canals feeding the ink reservoirs above the steel print plates. As soon as the PCs enter, the machines begin vacuuming blood from the NPC's body. To make matters worse, the same NPC appears also to be strapped with more steel cables to the arcane conveyor splayed out over a sheet of vellum. One of them is actually Vinn. The Raven took great pleasure in living the changeling up in cables and then painfully implanting dozens of exsanguination canals into his body. The Raven then made it very clear to Vinn that his only chance to gain freedom before the pumping canals reduce him to a grey husk was to successfully impersonate the party's NPC associate so they release him. Meanwhile the actual NPC restrained to the conveyor also has mere moments left to live before the heavy steel plates smear him across the vellum. The PCs must succeed on a Spot or Sense Motive check against Vinn's Disguise or Bluff check to tell the impostor apart from the real captive.

Six rounds after the PCs enter, the NPC hostage is pulped by a crushing steel print plate. In the meantime, Vinn takes  $2d+1$  points of Constitution damage every round he is connected to the exsanguination tubes. In order to remove the 20 exsanguination tubes on Vinn, a PC must make a Use Rope check to tie off the tubes, or Heal check (to safely remove them without bursting arteries) every round. A result of 10 or higher check is good enough to deal with one tube, and for every 5 points by which the result exceeds 10, another tube can be safely removed. If this check fails or the PCs simply rip the tubes off, Vinn takes  $1d6$  points of Constitution damage for every tube removed. For every five tubes removed, subtract one from the amount of Constitution damage the changeling takes every round. When the last tube dealt with, Vinn is safe. Alternately a DC 30 Disable Device check renders the pump inoperable (A DC 25 prevents the pump from operating for 1 round).

Freeing the actual NPC is a matter of severing the steel cables tying them to the conveyor. Six cables anchor the NPC, and the conveyor moves him 10 feet per round. The press is also raised 10 feet off the ground, so unless a PC has a reach weapon they must ascend onto the conveyor with a DC 25 Climb check to hack at the cables. If they do not stand on the moving conveyor they must also spend a move action to run alongside the press in order to continue attacking the cables.

Clockwork gears and swinging steel plates and bars whirl and swoop (narrowly missing the supine hostage until the end of round six). Anyone standing on or adjacent to the conveyor is attacked by  $1d4$  gears, bars, or plates each round ( $+10$  melee,  $2d6$  bludgeoning damage) though they may make a DC 25 Tumble check to avoid these attacks. Any PC may make a DC 30 Disable Device check to deactivate the conveyor and whirling press machinery above. A DC 25 on the check slows the conveyor for one round.

Steel Cables: Hardness 8; hp 15; Break DC 25; Use Rope DC 25.

Creatures: To further hinder the party three rancid beetle zombies skulk in this chamber, attacking the PCs as they strive to free the hostages. These hideous abominations appear much like regular zombies but give off a rancid scent as their flesh writhes with the swarm of disgusting, chattering beetles beneath. They fight until slain, pouring forth their rancid beetle swarms as they fall.

7. LIBRARY (EL 12)

This large, musty chamber with sagging wooden floorboards houses dozens of shelves heaped with tomes. Some shelves have rotted away, depositing their contents in piles among the moldy remains. A black iron chandelier fixed with lit candles hangs above the northern area of the room, illuminating a mahogany writing desk below.

There are many masterpieces among the texts here, but the most important one as far as the PCs are concerned is the fifth section of "Stars in the Darkness," freshly penned by the Raven. A writing desk on the far side of the room is well kept, and an inkwell, several masterwork quills made of raven feathers, leather covers, binding glue, and other writing and bookbinding supplies are strewn there. Anyone with the Investigator feat may make a DC 30 Search check to realize that someone just finished writing and binding a manuscript. The manuscript contains original copies of the first four manuscript fragments and the newly penned fifth as well.

The manuscript is filed among the books using the archaic indexing system of the Old Archives. If the PCs learned of Corbin's use of this system they can track down his manuscript with ease. If they did not get this clue from Aethia Cardance, a DC 30 Search check is required to track the bound manuscript down.

The fifth manuscript fragment contains details on the traps set up in areas 3, 4 and 6, and if the PCs have yet to explore any of these areas they can learn about what awaits them there.

Creatures: The Raven makes his appearance here, hiding behind the false wall at the back of the room by the stairwell. As the PCs investigate his writing desk he attacks by first casting animate rope and untying the heavy ropes anchoring the black iron chandelier above. The chandelier comes crashing down on anyone by the desk, inflicting 4d6 damage (DC 20 Reflex save half) and igniting the surrounding paper and wood.

The flames spread 5 feet per round unless quenched, and anyone within the blaze takes 2d6 fire damage per round. The fire eventually consumes the entire wooden inner structure of the Archives unless the party puts it out.

On the second round the Raven casts warped wood on the floorboards below a PC. The rotting wood gives way under the strain, plunging the PC down 30 feet to the floor of area 6 below (a DC 20 Reflex save avoids the fall). The Raven then expends a charge from his wand of dimension door to retreat to the rookery above and awaits the party there.

R ROOKERY EL 12

The wind dashes the rooftop with a torrent of black snow and ash. Sickly dark clouds swirl in the sky above. Rows of wooden cages clutter the roof around the stables, and swarms of ravens flap their wings against the wind. The crows frenetic in the thundering fury of the gale.

Creatures: The Raven awaits the PCs here along with two murders of crows. Corbin has charmed the final NPC boss and had them imbibe a potion of disguise self before dressing them in a long black cloak and a raven mask identical to his own. The Raven casts longstrider protection from energy, and harkskin before the battle is joined. As the PCs ascend the Raven expends a charge of his wand of image with the NPC hostage standing adjacent. A DC 25 Spot check is necessary to tell the NPC from the Raven amidst the whirling mirror images.

Murders of Crows (3): hp 13 each. Monster Manual 237 (bal swarm).

Corbin Eldridge: hp 71, see page 36.

Tactics: The Raven first casts hold person on a fighter type. He fights between the rows of wooden cages to make the most of his alay fighting class ability and crowdwalk. The Raven fights with a style and grace similar to his master's, employing Combat Expertise to full effect and disarming adjacent foes. The crows do not harm him as they tear at the party.

Development: If PCs have the Raven's original bound manuscript in their possession and threaten to destroy it, the Raven falters and becomes shaken. He targets the holder of the manuscript exclusively, attempting to retrieve his masterpiece. He threatens to kill the hostage as well. If a PC destroys the manuscript, the Raven is dazed for one round, and thereafter flies into a ferocious rage (no Combat Expertise) and strives to destroy the PC who ruined his writings.

QUOTH THE RAVEN, "NEVERMORE"

With the Raven defeated, Sharn's terror is at an end—for now. The fires continue to rage in the Cogs, and the terrible storms of the Black Winter will no doubt grow worse before they clear, but a mad killer's stranglenoid on the city is broken, and the PCs are lavished with honors, medals, and rewards for their service.

Inside the dark recesses of Hell's Heart, Viktor's hate only grows upon learning of his dark angels' defeat. He seethes and plots against them, his influence churning the unseen shadows of Sharn's underworld. The party's nightmare is far from over. As long as their nemesis draws breath, they will never be safe.

In tribute to the final issue of DUNGEON, Nicolas Logue retired himself as a character. He's starting a new character named Nicolas Kinoshita Logue, and his first level is in a special base class: Unemployed. Also in tribute to DUNGEON's last hurrah, Nick exiled himself from the pursuit of Illuvial. Archly based in the City That Never Sleeps, where he is homeless, Nick enjoys a jaunt to the City of Ravens any chance he gets. He swears the villains of this adventure are not in any way autobiographical. Many thanks and hats off to James Jacobs, Erik Mona, Jeremy Walker, and James LaFond Sutter for all the good times in these pages.

Prince of Demons

Ringworm, exiled in his Abyssal layer of the Gaping Maw for eons, Etem-gorgon's reign as first among demon lords may be coming to an end. The storm clouds gather as his inviolate sanctum is about to be breached by an unlikely alliance from across the planes. Despite its combined strength, this invasion offers no guarantees of success. For the alliance faces no house of straw, but rather the entrenched hordes and reinforced ramparts of the home of the Prince of Demons.

"Prince of Demons" is the final chapter in the Savage Tide Adventure Path, a complete campaign consisting of 12 adventures appearing in DUNGEON magazine. For additional aid in running this campaign, check out DRAGON magazine's monthly "Savage Tidings" articles, a series that helps players and DMs prepare for and expand upon the campaign.

ADVENTURE PATH, HIGH-LEVEL (13TH–20TH), PLANAR

Adventure Background

The pieces are in place and stand ready for an epic assault on the home plane of Demogorgon, an assault that could change the power structure of the multiverse—though whether history will record the endeavor to have been heroic or foolhardy remains to be seen. Few know that Demogorgon's greatest war is not against Graz'zt or Orcus or another physical antagonist, but against himself—his two heads, Aameul and Hethradiah, both long for sole control over his body and domain. Countless times before, Demogorgon's plans have failed as his personalities, each considering themselves the true architect, unknowingly sabotage the other's work. Without this hidden disadvantage, there's no telling what Demogorgon could have accomplished. Aameul has tried to murder Hethradiah before, but in an ironic paradox, without one, the other cannot exist. Now, Hethradiah has stumbled upon a solution that may just work. Rather than destroy Aameul, he hopes to absorb him—to merge completely and become one.

Using eldritch rituals learned from the occultic demon prince Dagon, the Prince of Demons used the first savage tide to undo the empire of Thanaglan 1,000 years ago. At the time, the savage tide was merely one of many idle distractions to bring ruin and despair to the Material Plane, but it also served as the genesis for Hethradiah's plan. Ever the more savage and feral of the two personalities, Hethradiah theorized that, with a potent enough vortex of savagery harvested from a large enough source, he could transform Aameul into something more akin to himself, allowing the two to become one. All he needed was a savage tide large enough to drive millions mad. His solution: seed dozens of Material Plane cities with shadow pearls and then trigger them simultaneously through a master pearl kept safe within an ancient edifice on the shores of the Brine Flats—a primeval temple to the Prince of the Darkened Depths known as Wat Dagon.

Adventure Synopsis

The PCs gather their forces and lay their plans for the invasion of Gaping Maw. After aiding in the taking of a beach in Demogorgon's realm, they must avoid demonic assassins and aid Orcus's legions on their march to Lemoriax, along the way lifting a magical effect that bars entry into Wat Dagon, the ancient temple that holds the master pearl capable of triggering the mass savage tide. After fighting through Wat Dagon's defenders, the PCs finally attract Demogorgon's attention. If they wish to stop the savage tide, the Prince of Demons must fall.

Adventure Hooks

This adventure begins after the PCs have secured the aid of several like-minded entities who wish to see Demogorgon fall, yet you need not have played the rest

Savage Tide to make use of "Prince of Demons." Demogorgon is one of D&D's greatest villains, and the adventure can serve as a capstone to any campaign in which the Prince of Demons has played a major role: simply substitute out the master pearl at the end of the adventure for whatever device or plan he has in your campaign. Alternately, you could use this adventure as a "bank" of stat blocks and encounters for any adventure in which you send your PCs into the depths of Gaping Maw. Maybe they've been hired by a powerful good outsider to defeat Arendagrost, or perhaps the soul of a loved one has been captured and is being kept by General Ghorvash along with (or instead of) Vanhus Vanderboren's doomed soul.

PART ONE. THE CALM BEFORE THE STORM

As the previous adventure came to a close, the PCs recruited several different armies and agents for the coming assault on Gaping Maw. Demogorgon's paranoia and whispers of an army gathering against him have set his own defensive forces into motion, yet he certainly doesn't suspect a coordinated attack by several of his enemies at once. This, combined with the fact that multiple enemies will cause his divided nature to work against him, is the PCs' greatest advantage.

Yet it isn't going to be as simple as storming Gaping Maw—before the PCs can even think about planning the assault, they'll need to gather the leaders of the disparate armies and convince them to work together. Orcus, Charon, Malcanthet, Gwynharwyf, and Iggywily may all have their own reasons for wanting to attack Gaping Maw, but each have their own goals and prejudices as well. Left to their own devices, each group waits for another to make the first move, intending to swoop in once Demogorgon's defenses are focused elsewhere to claim victory for themselves. As a result, nothing develops of the assault until someone sets things in motion. This responsibility falls to the PCs.

Gathering the Forces

Depending on their success in the previous adventure, the PCs should have contacts with several of Demogorgon's enemies. This adventure assumes those enemies are Charon, Iggywily, Malcanthet, Gwynharwyf, and Orcus; if the PCs failed to secure the aid of one of these allies, make sure to apply the appropriate adjustments to the adventure.

Contacting these five should be a simple matter for 20th-level characters—the red tape they experienced in the previous adventure is no longer a problem, and whether they show up to personally invite these five to war or send messengers makes no difference—the five are predisposed to accept visits from the PCs and their agents, provided each is treated with the respect they think they deserve. Securing a time when the five plus the PCs should meet to discuss their plans is simple, but deciding on a location might be more difficult.

All five initially demand that the War Council take place in their own domains, forcing the others out of their homes and into dangerous territory. Of course none of the five react well to the others' demands—the only real solution is for the PCs to pick a meeting location that the other five begrudgingly accept as "neutral ground." There are very few places in the multiverse that qualify as such; a few are detailed below, but your players may come up with something equally feasible. If your PCs are having trouble coming up with ideas, the following three locations are each assigned a Knowledge (the from a private treasury as needed. The method of representation, the role in battle, and the particular secret goals for assaulting Gaping Maw for each of the five are given below. When the council begins, all five are bickering and arguing; leave it to the PCs to call for order and lead the discussion. Although their allies are powerful, this is the PCs' fight—let them lead the way.

Charon: If the meeting occurs on the Styx, Charon attends in person. Otherwise, he sends a proxy in the form of a lost soul, a petitioner recruited from the countless dead that make their journey along the River Styx. Of course Charon does not select his proxy idly; he picks someone with ties to the PCs. Rowyn Kellari is perhaps the best choice for this role. Still enraged at Demogorgon for his disruption of the River Styx at the end of "Wells of Darkness," Charon has little interest in the battle other than seeing Demogorgon suffer. With countless marraenloths (Monster Manual II 203) under his command, Charon can send a fleet of yugoloth boatmen into Gaping Maw to support assaults on Abyss and the Claws of Belcheresk and provide floating platforms for the invaders to attack from. He has no ulterior motives in the battle.

Gwynharwyf: Gwynharwyf attends the Council in person if it is held in the Outlands or on the Styx and is accompanied by Celeste, but if it takes place in Sigil, only Celeste attends. The eladrin paragon is the least likely to betray the PCs, but working in close tandem with demon lords and Iggywily still tries her patience. Yet her hatred of Demogorgon burns brighter—the Prince of Demons captured and humiliated her long ago, and Gwynharwyf sees this as an excellent opportunity to realize vengeance against him. She has secured two eladrin hosts from her queen Morwel, each comprising 50,000 eladrins apiece. Her desire to see Demogorgon suffer and even perish may inadvertently offset some of the advantages the PCs have against Demogorgon later in the adventure.

Iggywily: The Witch-Queen attends the council with her four arcaneloth apprentices, traveling via astral projection. She does not truly have an axe to grind in this battle—she's seen countless wars fought on the Abyss between demonic powers before, but never one involving cooperating eladrin and demonic armies. Her interest in the battle is more one of scholastic curiosity than anything else. Iggywily's primary contribution to the battle is transportation—using her epic magic, she can open several portals into Gaping Maw through which Gwynharwyf's and Orcus's armies can invade. Of course, she does have a secret agenda as well—once the PCs have used the Iron Flask of Tuerny, she arrives to claim the artifact as her own in partial payment for all the aid she's provided the PCs. Her goal is to use the artifact to capture Demogorgon's parting essence should the PCs defeat him—the artifact cannot capture a being as powerful as a true demon lord (only their aspects), but Iggywily thinks she can use it to gather what remains of Demogorgon's primal animus once he is defeated.

Malcanthet: If in "Enemies Of My Enemy," Malcanthet convinced a PC to accept her Queen's Kiss abnity, she should retain a link with that PC. In this event, she attends the Council via this link, using the PC to observe the council and make her will known, taking part in the discussion via telepathy and depending on her PC agent to repeat her words aloud. Otherwise, she attends via astral projection, or sends a Radiant Sister bearing the Queen's Kiss if the meeting takes place in Sigil. Malcanthet does not offer an army, claiming that Demogorgon "knows her tricks" and that her incubus infantry wouldn't be of much help. However, she can manifest her spell-like abilities through a PC bearing her Kiss, and volunteers aid in this manner—if no PC currently bears her mark, she arranges to place it on a volunteer at some point before the battle begins. Accepting her aid in this manner is a chaotic evil act, but in the grand scheme of things a minor one, especially if the PC takes pains to remove the mark via dispel chaos or dispel evil once the adventure is over. Of course being a demon lord, Malcanthet isn't entirely forthcoming about her reasons for aiding the PCs in this battle. Now that the war is on, whatever the outcome, her alliance with Demogorgon is about to end—she suspects that Demogorgon's time has come to an end, and knows that once he's defeated, the mantle of Prince of Demons will shift. She doesn't want that crown for herself—it brings with it too much in the way of enemies and trouble—but she does very much want to be allied with, and perhaps control, whoever does inherit the crown. In fact, her goal is to try to coax her PC agent to attempt to claim the title, betraying the rest of the PCs if necessary.

Orcus: Orcus, still not completely convinced that this whole thing isn't a ruse to draw him out of Thanatos and into a trap, sends a rotten, shambling blood-stained cadaver known as Xerivar as his proxy no matter where the meeting takes place. Three quasits perch on Xerivar's skull and shoulders, casually tearing away and consuming small strips of his putrid flesh as they observe the proceedings. Xerivar speaks with Orcus's voice, serving as a direct link to the Prince of Undeath. Orcus has committed four of his legions to the invasion: the V Asphyxian, the IX Exsanguinos, the XI Derapitus, and his vaunted personal legion—the I Thanatos, a legion that has never been defeated in battle. Each legion consists of 25,000 assorted demons and undead. Orcus leaves command of these legions to his generals, and makes plain his intent to confront Demogorgon atop the Prince's fortress of Abyss, a bold move indeed. Orcus desperately wants to be the one to defeat Demogorgon, and not just because he wants his power. Of all the demon lords in the Abyss, it is Orcus who has the largest cult of followers on the Material Plane. It is Orcus who is closest to becoming a god, and he hopes that the additional influx of Abyssal power he would gain by defeating his ancient enemy would finally be enough to catapult him fully into the ranks of the divine.

The Battle Plan

Let the PCs devise the battle plan for the assault on Gaping Maw. Handout #1 contains the most up-to-date information about the movement and locations of Demogorgon's army on Gaping Maw as gathered from eladrin and demonic spies scattered throughout the layer and augmented with any papers the PCs may have discovered in "Enemies Of My Enemy." More importantly, the map indicates five locations where the PCs can stage their initial invasions of the Abyssal layer—these locations are called portal points.

Portal Points: Iggrwyl can use epic magic to simultaneously open several enormous gates across the face of Gaping Maw, allowing the eladrin armies and demon armies to invade from any point in the multiverse. Unfortunately, these portals can only be opened in a few places in Gaping Maw where the planar boundaries are weak enough to bear such an invasive and enormous portal for any length of time. There are five such points in relatively close proximity to Lemoriax, but the catch is that Demogorgon knows where these points are, and has stationed Lemorian legions at them. Once armies go through, the battles begin immediately. Gwynharwyf's preference is to attack from the flanks, sending the Tourbillon Gale Host in from the Blood Run portal point and the Starry Night Host (to be commanded by Celeste) in from the Oldclet Cove portal point, and then to press in toward each other without worrying about having any of Demogorgon's legions behind them. Orcus's preference is exactly the opposite—he prefers to stage his forces at the Lemoriax portal point so that his forces can strike hard and fast at Demogorgon's capital city. This leaves two more portal points unattended—one deeper in the Screaming Langle (rumored to be guarded by not only a legion of demons but by one of Demogorgon's deadliest spawn—Arendagrost), and one along the Brine Flats (which has been fortified with a defensive battery of demons but is easily the least-defended of the five points).

Expected Assault Plan

If the players aren't tactically minded, they can certainly leave the planning of the assault to Gwynharwyf and Orcus—both are old hands at such things, and their advice is sound. Left to plan the assault on their own, the forces available to the PCs deploy as follows:

Charon's Fleet: Charon's fleet of 5,000 marraenoluths are best utilized at sea, in the Brine Flats, where they can run interference against the forces of the balor Belcheresk's fleet, preventing them from providing aid to the land-based assault while at the same time pulling Demogorgon's attentions to yet another corner of his realm.

Gwynharwyf: The eladrin paragon personally leads the Tourbillon Gale

Host at the Blood Run portal point, while Celeste commands the Starry Night Host at Old Lot Cove.

Iggwily: Beyond creating the portals through which Gwynharwyf's and Orcus's armies invade, Iggwily has little to add to the fight. She can certainly be convinced to open an additional portal for the PCs and any allies they wish to bring along if they wish to invade Gaping Maw via one of the portal points.

Malcanthet: The Queen of Succubi keeps her involvement subtle, acting through her chosen PC agent. Remember, she can not only observe the world through her agent's senses, but can use the agent as a focus for any other spell-like abilities. The PC doesn't get to choose when and how she uses these spell-like abilities, but neither do they take an action on the agent's part to do so. If the PC agrees to serve as Malcanthet's agent, she feigns insult at being rebuffed but does not volunteer any other support. Left to her own devices, she sends a disguised astral projection stealthily into Gaping Maw so she can maintain an eye on things, like, to follow along in the PCs' wake.

Orcus: The Prince of Undeath deploys his legions in order of expendability, beginning with the V Asphyxian via the portal point closest to Lemoriax. He fully expects the V Asphyxian to be destroyed and plans on sending the IX Esanguinos legion in immediately thereafter to break Demogorgon's forces in the region and establish a beach head. He then wishes to send in the VII Decapitus to march to the gates of Lemoriax. At the same time, Orcus intends to challenge Demogorgon himself, planning on deploying the I Thanatos against Lemoriax once Demogorgon is defeated.

Flies in the Ointment

Three other demon lords likely have an interest in how things turn out in Gaping Maw, yet their presence is minor or behind the scenes. It's unlikely that the PCs ever learn the full extent of their involvement, but they are quickly summarized here for the DM.

Ahazu: If the PCs promised Ahazu the Seizer a replacement prisoner, Demogorgon certainly fits the bill, as do several other villains the PCs encounter during this adventure. But before Ahazu can seize the replacement, that creature must be killed. At the moment of death, the agent of said death must consign that creature to the Wells of Darkness by verbal proclamation, at which point the vacuum left by Shami Amourae's vacancy can reach across the Abyss to take away the victim. If the PCs promised Ahazu a sacrifice but do not deliver on this promise, the repercussions are detailed in Concluding the Adventure.

Dagon: The obyrith lord Dagon is where Demogorgon first learned of the process for creating a savage tide. Dagon, being the ancient source of revelation he is, suspects that Demogorgon's bid to unleash the savage tide would indirectly result in his destruction, and as things draw to a close, the obyrith Prince of the Darkened Depths slips near to the waters surrounding the Shadowsea side of Wat Dagon and quietly attempts to claim the crown as his own as Demogorgon's slave.

Grazzt: Like Dagon, Grazzt lusts for Demogorgon's crown. The Dark Prince is currently embroiled in a complex plot involving Lolth, but keeps an ear to the ground, likely paying his sometimes lover Iggywyl for whispered updates as the war progresses. Yet unlike Dagon, Graz'zt does not suspect Orcus, the PCs, and their other allies can defeat the Prince of Demons—how could they when such a prize has eluded Graz'zt himself? Still, once the PCs confront Demogorgon, Graz'zt's hidden agents in Gaping Maw inform him, and the Dark Prince uses a secret portal to enter a secluded point in the Screaming jungle so he'll be able to make a claim for the crown as well when the time comes.

The Savage Tide

Yet all this is, for the PCs, nothing more than a distraction. The outcome of the Battle of Gaping Maw is, in the end, irrelevant to what they are here to prevent—the savage tide. Although the details on where and how Demogorgon's planning on triggering the savage tide are secret, it should be a relatively simple matter for the PCs to determine what they need to know. If they recovered Bagromar's reports and other battle orders at the end of "Enemies Of My Enemy," 104 hours of investigation of the reports by someone who can read Abyssal reveals both the location and the method. Alternately, this information can be discovered through powerful divination spells like commune, contact other plane, legend lore, or vision. As the PCs soon learn, the problem isn't finding out where and how Demogorgon's going to trigger the savage tide, but how to get to the site in question.

All 14 of the shadow pearls seeded throughout the Material Plane are linked to a master pearl which is kept safe in an ancient structure perched on the shores of the Bone Flats. This structure is Wat Dagon, an ancient temple raised from the raw matter of the Abyss by devotees of the Prince of the Darkened Depths eons ago. Wat Dagon squatted on the shores of the Bone Flats before Demogorgon came to rule here, and it was the Prince of Demons' favored site for contacting Dagon for advice or to learn more secrets of the Abyss. It was here that Dagon taught Demogorgon how to craft shadow pearls, and it is deep within the building that the master pearl can be found.

Bagromar's notes indicate that the master pearl is the key Demogorgon intends to use to trigger the savage tide. The notes go on to indicate that, while the time is not yet right to trigger the tide (since the event requires a specific planar conjunction), that time draws quite near. You should set the timing of this event as fits best with your campaign style—if you want this adventure to be a race against the clock, you can set the conjunction for only a few days or hours in the future. In any event, it should be obvious that without the master pearl Demogorgon cannot trigger the savage tide.

Unfortunately, no information is available on how the master pearl can be destroyed or removed from Wat Dagon. Research into the nature of similar artifacts gives some clues, and it's certainly possible that Mordenkainen's disjunction can disable the master pearl as well—see page 95 for more details on how the PCs can defuse the pearl.

Making matters worse is the fact that Wat Dagon doesn't technically exist on Gaping Maw. It exists in the boundary between the 88th and 89th layers of the Abyss, "sandwiched" between Gaping Maw and Dagon's realm of Shadowsea. Wat Dagon is, in effect, a miniature layer of the Abyss of its own, a tiny demiplane (or "demilayer") with its own planar traits. Access to Wat Dagon is tightly controlled, and while the interdiction zone around Lemoriax functions, entrance into Wat Dagon is impossible without Demogorgon's consent.

PART TWO: THE BATTLE OF GAPING MAW

At the appointed time, as the forces of the eladrins and legions of Thanatos gather in their respective locations, Iggwily and her apprentices begin to open a series of planar breaches using an epic spell she developed for just such an assault (she used the same magic many years ago to organize an invasion of the Flancess, but was defeated by an artifact known as the Crook of Rao). There's no real need to run the battles between the PCs' allies and Demogorgon's armies—it's better to simply describe the mass battles at the times when the PCs are nearby. In any event, the PCs' goal on Gaping Maw should not be to aid Orcus or Gwynharwyf in their battles—these assaults are merely distractions meant to divert Demogorgon's attention and resources from Wat Dagon and the pearl within. This chapter presents several encounters that the PCs can take part in, encounters better handled by a small group of powerful characters rather than an army of eladrins or demons (whose strengths are better utilized against like threats elsewhere on Gaping Maw). Each of these encounters begins with a hook you can use to draw the PCs in; they can be accomplished in any order, and not all of them are necessarily required in order to achieve entrance into Wat Dagon. Yet each one of these encounters that the PCs handle before they attempt Wat Dagon's deadly gantlet will make their final task a little bit easier for each of these encounters offers yet another chance to distract and confuse Demogorgon.

Although Iggwily's magic can only open portals at five locations in Gaping Maw, she can send armies from nearly any point in the multiverse. The magic focuses on a specially prepared scepter, one of five that Iggwily has prepared (one for each portal point). The commander of each group simply needs to plant the scepter in the ground at the location he wishes his end of the portal to open at. When Iggwily activates the portals, they burst into being with a blast of electricity and thunder—reality ripples aside like a curtain, revealing the steaming landscape of Gaping Maw beyond. These portals can be anywhere from twenty to a thousand feet wide depending upon the number of troops that need to move through, and remain open for only a very short time before Iggwily closes them—no one wants to let Demogorgon's forces leak out of Gaping Maw, after all.

Storming the Beach (EL 21)

The PCs can, of course, use their own resources to reach Gaping Maw, but it's nothing for Iggwily to open up a portal for them to step through when she opens other portals elsewhere in Gaping Maw. A study of the portal points reveals that only one of the five is relatively unmaneuvered the "Shore Defense Battery" according to Bagromar's notes, has only about two dozen demons guarding the portal point. The beach is a natural bottleneck, too small to effectively stage a large invasion and edged at either sides by razor-sharp cliffs, yet if the PCs can seize the beach and the bunkers on the nearby hill, they'll be able to control one of the five portal points. Once the PCs have control of this site, Iggwily leaves the portal open. As long as the PCs retain control of the portal site, they and their forces are only a teleport away from escaping Gaping Maw, but more to the point, the persistent portal should act like an itch Demogorgon can't scratch without sacrificing defenses from elsewhere. The beach portal may be small, but it's one more distraction in the war. If the PCs ask for aid, Gwynharwyf is willing to give them command of a group of nine bralani eladrins led by a ghaele eladrin.

Alternately, you can use this encounter as a template for any large battle that the PCs might find themselves in at the start of the adventure. If they decide to accompany one of the eladrin hosts for example, they may be called upon to take out this battery before the host itself can advance.

A muddy beach sits at the edge of a vast tropical ocean, bounded to the left and right by jagged razor-sharp cliffs. The expanse of beach climbs gradually to a line of defensive fortifications a little over a hundred feet away. Craters and berms lie in the way of the approach to this fortified edge, and a thick bank of dark green fog rolls fifty feet above, blotting out views of an alien sky.

Iggwily's portal manifests as a sphere of ripping energy just off the shore of the beach. When the PCs arrive, they can manifest within the portal itself or anywhere along the shoreline itself. The starting locations of their eladrin allies (if any) are indicated on the Storming the Beach map on page 66.

Creatures: In all, there are 26 demons defending the bunkers and the portal point site—twelve hezrous, eleven babaus, two mariliths, and a nalfeshnee—a formidable force to fight against, let alone run in combat as a D&D encounter. Take the time to map out the battlefield for the PCs beforehand and allow them to use the map to plan their attack; once they arrive, place all the demons that are visible but keep the others (including the locations of all the blast discs) hidden for now.

The demons are aware that an invasion could happen at any moment, and unfortunately Iggwily's portal is far from subtle. By the time the PCs and their eladrin allies have emerged, the demons are ready to fight.

Note that the bunkers are armed with powerful siege weapons: three force missile ballistas (each operated by a pair of babaus) and a pair of acid launchers (each operated by a marilith)—details on these magical siege engines are given in Appendix One.

Tactics: Battles with numerous foes can be harrowing to run. Consider giving the PCs each a handful of eladrins to run during the battle so you can focus on the demons.

Before the Battle: The demons are on full alert, and even before the PCs arrive have several of their at-will spell-like abilities in effect.

- Babaus: See invisibility.

- Nalfeshnee: Call lightning, unholy aura.
- Mariliths: Align weapon, magic weapon, unholy aura.
- First Round: On the initial round of combat, the demons quickly mobilize and prepare their defense as follows.
  - Babaus: Each babau attempts to summon another babau, then orders any summoned babaus to teleport over to engage the invaders in melee.
  - Hezrous: Each hezrou attempts to summon another hezrou, ordering any summoned demons to teleport over to engage the invaders in melee.

• Nalfeshnee: The nalfeshnee flies up into the cloud cover above, circling the battlefield but staying within five feet of the cloud's edge so he can see out but enjoys cover against attacks. His first act is to use an area greater dispel magic against the PCs.

• Mariliths: Each marilith puts up a blade barrier along the shore, attempting to catch as many characters as possible.

On the Beach: Against any targets on the beach, the demons use the following tactics:

• Babaus: The babaus inside the bunkers take up positions as indicated near the entrances and hide, readying an action to attack any enemy that enters the bunker. The six babaus outside working in teams of two, use their force missile ballistae to fire upon random targets.

• Hexrouts: The hexrouts use unholy blights exclusively against the PCs, since they know eladrins are immune to chaos hammer.

• Nalfeshnee: The nalfeshnee's standard act is to blast targets with call lightning, but if the PCs ever group up he hits them with a slow. If the PCs include a spellcaster whose magic seems particularly effective, he feebles minds that character.

• Mariliths: Each marilith, by using all six arms, can effectively fire an acid launcher once per round. They do so, targeting densely grouped packs of the enemy or singling out heavily armored foes (who are less likely to have good Reflex saves).

At the Bunkers: Once PCs or eladrins reach the bunkers, the demons switch to the following tactics:

• Babaus: The babaus hiding inside the bunkers attack from hiding to utilize sneak attacks; they are joined by the force missile crews only if few targets remain on the beach.

• Hexrouts: Once foes reach the bunkers, they engage PCs in melee, with hexrouts unable to reach them using unholy blight indiscriminately.

• Nalfeshnee: The nalfeshnee only turns his attention to the bunkers if no threatening targets remain on the beach. He can't easily fit inside the bunkers, but can land on the ground to the south to use his spell-like abilities against foes inside—his first act is to try to summon 1d4 more hexrouts to send against the PCs.

• Mariliths: As soon as the PCs reach the bunkers, each marilith attempts to summon another marilith, then moves to engage the intruders in melee.

The demons fight to the death, so devoted to (and frightened of) Demogorgon that they avoid the standard trick of teleporting away when brought to low hit points. The price of failure is much worse than death on the battlefield in Demogorgon's army.

Development: Once the PCs gain control of the bunker, Iggywyl's portal is relatively safe. Surviving eladrins take over the site, with more arriving through the portal as needed to keep the total stationed here at a few dozen. This becomes a relatively safe place for the PCs to rest and recover, and the portal's constant flickering becomes yet another thorn in Demogorgon's side (with effects as detailed in the sidebar on page 92).

Death of the V Asphyxian (EL 23)

Orcus himself arrives in Gaping Maw at approximately the same time the PCs arrive. His confrontation with Demogorgon is fated to go on for hours as the two battle throughout the towers of Abyss hundred of miles out to sea, but now and then, the roars of the two demon lords echo through the sky. Orcus planned his initial assault to coincide with an attack on Lemnax, led by his armies. As detailed above, his opening gambit is to send in the V Asphyxian, a legion of nabassu demons and tiefling mercenaries, to sacrifice themselves as a devastating first assault.

Unfortunately, the portal point closest to Lemnax is also a trap, for Demogorgon augmented the Demos Horde located there with one of his deadliest minions—Arendagrost the Maw of the Abyss—and ordered one of his partial clone generals, Tetradian, to personally lead the defense of the region. Arendagrost and Tetradian's armies caught the V Asphyxian completely off guard. As soon as the V Asphyxian emerged into Gaping Maw, they began to destroy them with their force missile. At the same time, the V Asphyxian used a potent device created by Tetradian, a totem of negation, to destroy the dead magic in the area around the other portals. The site proved a further invasion and the V Asphyxian was destroyed, Tetradian was destroyed, leaving Arendagrost the Maw of the Abyss.

When the PCs finish dealing with their own assault, one of them receives a hush message via sending from Iggywyl herself: "Lemnax portal point compromised. Orcus's legions shut out. Arendagrost is present. If hard, we can salvage the attack, but only if it's dealt with immediately." The site of the Lemnax portal point is known to the PCs; if they can reach it within the hour, defeat Arendagrost, and remove the dead magic zone, the armies of Orcus can continue the attack. Attempts to recruit aid from the eladrins fail—Gwynharwyf and Celeste and their armies are locked in fantastic battles of their own. It's up to the PCs to open the way for the rest of Orcus's forces.

When the PCs arrive at the Lemnax portal point, read them the following:

The jungle suddenly comes to an end at a blackened swath of char and blood. The desolate clearing sprawls for miles, only recently formed by the wicked blades and fell spells of demon spawn. A field of blasted stumps and ruin is all that remains of the once-tangled jungle escape. In some places, the trees look burnt, in others they are melted, and still others appear frozen and shattered. Black blood, gore, and bile—still fresh from the stench of it—are splattered across mounds of dead fiends and other horrors. The calamity seems to have been complete, with no clear victors, almost as though both sides annihilated each other. At the center of the desolation stands a sinister totem, a ten-foot-tall pole of carved demon faces. A tattered battle standard bearing the black death's head emblem of Orcus's V Asphyxian Legion hangs from the totem and dangling from its lower border by its hair is the decapitated head of the legion's undead general.

A search of the battlefield reveals the bodies of nabassu demons, Jeffings, and various undead creatures, all branded with Orcus's symbol. A fair number of bar-igura, hezrou, and babau are dead here as well, indicating that the battle wasn't completely one-sided.

The totem at the center of the clearing is a totem of negation, a powerful magic item that, when planted in the ground and activated, creates an immobile dead magic zone. Magic (including all spells, spell-like abilities, and supernatural effects) simply does not function in a 60-foot radius around the totem, which effectively prevents even Iggywyl's epic magic from opening a portal here. A totem of negation is fantastically expensive and time-consuming to create—Demogorgon assumed that an invading army would only attempt to use the portal point nearest Lemoriax, one of many assumptions that may well cost him dearly.

Creatures. The horror that was left behind by Tetradian to clean up the battle field and guard the totem of negation remains, though it has burrowed beneath a mound of corpses 60 feet from the outer edge of the dead magic zone. Only one of his three heads remains above ground, and even it remains partially covered in the dead. In this position, since only one of his heads is exposed, Arendagrost's penalty to Hide checks from size is negated, effectively granting him a +12 bonus on his Hide check.

Arendagrost: hp 456; see Appendix Two.

Tactics. Arendagrost lies in wait until creatures approach within 120 feet (at which point he bursts from the ground, charging the closest foe to bite on the surprise round) or are about to enter the dead magic zone (in which case he emerges and roars a challenge if foes aren't in range of a charge). Arendagrost retreats into the dead magic zone if faced with powerful magic using Fly-By Attack to swoop out of the zone as necessary so that he ends his turn back inside. Arendagrost's breath weapons and death gaze don't function in the dead magic zone, but his physical attacks fast healing, immunities, and damage reduction certainly do.

Development. Arendagrost is closely tied to Demogorgon, and the monster's destruction is felt by the Prince of Demons as a sudden pang of rage. Demogorgon certainly doesn't mourn the death of his monstrous offspring, but it does add one more distraction to the list.

The totem of negation must be uprooted or destroyed to remove the dead magic zone. Once the PCs do so, Iggywyl opens a portal moments later and Orcus's IX Exsanguinos legion (a legion of vampire warlocks and fighters) and the XII Decapitus legion (blood fiends, nabassu rogues, death giants, and nightwalkers) pour through to establish a base of command. The commanders of this legion ignore the PCs for now, instead marshaling their forces for the short march to Lemoriax where they intend to lay siege to the city.

Although the IX Exsanguinos has its own commander, the leader of the XII Decapitus legion currently acts as a general for both legions. This imposing menace is the Skull King Quah-Nomag (NE male human 10gre-blooded cleric 14/thra.) of Orcus 3). He knows that Lemoriax is protected by a powerful interdiction zone and curtly asks the PCs to accompany his legions to the edge of this zone—their skills may be of use therein.

Master of Assassins (EL 22)

Demogorgon knows about the PCs, and knows they seek to prevent the savage hide. Once the PCs arrive on Gaping Maw and begin to take part in the assault, he knows it's time to handle them. While unable to personally confront them (especially if Gwynharwyf and Orcus are present on Gaping Maw), he does have a large number of assassins at his beck and call. And one of the deadliest of these is the bar-igura assassin Ulu-Thurg.

Creatures. This encounter can occur at any time—even after the PCs have invaded Wat Dagon, although this adventure assumes it takes place not long after Arendagrost's death. Demogorgon senses Arendagrost's destruction and orders Ulu-Thurg to travel to the Lemoriax portal point as soon as he can gather his forces. The amount of time this takes is left to you, but as long as they don't dally, the PCs should have plenty of time to destroy the totem of negation. Ulu-Thurg arrives as Orcus's armies are deploying and decides to bide his time, waiting for a good moment to strike against the PCs.

Ulu-Thurg, Demogorgon's master of assassins, resembles a lanky six-fingered demonic orangutan. He leads a group of war ape brutes, powerful savages culled from the wild fiendish dire ape tribes of the screaming jungle and awakened through Demogorgon's malevolence.

Tactics: Ulu-Thurg stalks the party for a time after he first spots them to observe their abilities, eventually setting up an ambush with the war apes if the PCs are traveling by foot, or waiting for a chance to strike as they camp. When the attack begins, the war apes first throw their spears and then charge into melee. Ulu-Thurg takes the opportunity to teleport in and attempt to abduct a PC to a remote location deep in the Screaming Jungle, where he tries to slay him individually before returning to the fight to repeat his attack on another PC.

Demonic Détente

Although demons and undead are tireless in their lust for destruction, there is little wisdom in forcing constant battle. As the IX Exsanguinos and XIII Decapitus legions near Lemonax, the commanders call for a halt to organize and prepare for the siege. Fully 50,000 undead and demons, eager to begin the fight, reluctantly settle in an immense camp on a ledge at the edge of a boggy plain, several miles from Lemonax and at the edge of what is known as the interdicted region.

This area is a spherical zone that surrounds the city of Lemonax to a range of 10 miles (which includes Wat Dagon); this zone duplicates the effects of a massive forbiddance spell, preventing entry via teleportation, plane shift, and all other planar travel spells. Astrally projected and summoned creatures cannot enter, and summoning spells fail automatically when used within the zone. These restrictions apply only to those who have not sworn oaths of loyalty to Demogorgon—his minions and the majority of Lemonax's denizens can teleport and summon within the zone easily. As long as the zone remains active, Orcus's armies remain reluctant to approach.

The interdiction zone is maintained by Demogorgon's will, but the immense ziggurat at the center of Lemonax, a step-pyramid known as Demogorgon's Throne, acts as the focus. If this focus is disrupted, the interdiction zone fails and Orcus's armies can lay siege to the capital city of Gaping Maw. Unfortunately for the PCs, none of Orcus's legions or their commanders want to enter the zone—the task of disrupting it falls to the party.

If the PCs did not accompany Quah-Nomag from the portal point he contacts them with a request phrased more like a demand via sending: "If you wish Orcus's legions to provide a distraction, you will come to me now. You are needed at the edge of the interdicted zone."

Quah-Nomag is an imposing man, a towering figure with the blood of ogres in his veins. Instrumental in restoring Orcus to life after the Prince of Undeath's time as Tenebrous, Quah-Nomag is one of Orcus's favorite minions. As the PCs reach his side, he explains that not only does the interdiction zone present a severe tactical disadvantage, but one of Demogorgon's largest armies, the Demos Horde, is camped nearby. Before Orcus's legions can lay siege to Lemonax and provide the distraction the PCs need to enter Wat Dagon, the Demos Horde and the interdiction zone must be removed.

The Demos Horde (EL 22 or 24)

Though the Demos Horde outnumber the two legions under his control, Quah-Nomag notes with a smirk that he has his own means of evening the playing field, noting that each enemy that falls provides his necromancers with a new conscript. Even so, he does not relish the thought of confronting a force so large as the Demos Horde. Yet a horde of demons is only as strong as its commander, and if the Demos Horde were to lose its leader Quah-Nomag's armies could shatter it with ease.

The question of who commands the Demos Horde, however, depends on how the PCs handled Part Six of "Enemies Of My Enemy." Normally the Demos Horde is commanded by General Tetradian, one of two partial clones grown from Demogorgon's own body. If the PCs managed to convince the other clone, General Bagromar, to turn against his brother Tetradian, then command of the Demos Horde has fallen to a lesser (but still powerful) demon named Gromsfed the Drowned. Tetradian and Bagromar clash elsewhere on Gaping Maw, their jealousy-fueled battle destined to carry on until one slays the other or Demogorgon intervenes. As long as this adventure continues, neither of these events is likely to occur. If the PCs didn't convince Bagromar to turn against his brother, though, both Gromsfed and Tetradian command the Demos Horde, and defeating them becomes a bit harder.

Not long after the PCs meet with Quah-Nomag and learn of what he wants them to do, a flock of ragged vargouilles flutters out of the trees toward them. Battered and ruined, having escaped the Demos Horde with only a few of their number intact, the vargouille spies report to the Skull King on the location of General Tetradian's command post. In general layout, the Demos Horde camp is similar to that of General Bagromar's camp (for a map, see page 81 of DUNGEON #149). Nearly 100,000 demons dwell in this camp, many of which can see invisibility or possess true seeing. Combined with the interdiction zone's blockage of teleportation spells, there remain very few ways for the PCs to reach the command tent without arousing the wrath of tens of thousands of demons.

Stealth combined with a high-arching, high-speed flightpath that descends down toward the tent (such as via wind walk), should get the PCs to the tent quickly enough while alerting few enough guards. With a DC 40 Diplomacy check, they can even convince Quah-Nomag to send a group of a few thousand troops on a suicide mission to attack the Demos Horde, creating a distraction that should allow the PCs the chance to reach the command tent quickly and without being noticed (Neither Tetradian nor Gromsfed bother to personally respond to an insignificant attack by only a few thousand demons.) For further advice on infiltrating a demonic camp like this, consult the encounter "Bagromar's Camp" on pages 80-81 of DUNGEON #149.

Creatures: General Tetradian's devilhide command tent is 60 feet in diameter and is supported by nine adamantine poles around a thicker central pole. These hold the tent roof 40 feet off the ground. The interior is dim and smoky, and characters who participated in the raid of Bagromar's tent might experience a wave of déjà vu upon entering, for a one-headed version of Demogorgon awaits them inside. Standing nearby is a 30-foot tall demon with the blackened skin of a frost-bitten corpse, red batlike wings, four arms, a snarling orcish head, and a massive gaping mouth in his abdomen flanked by a set of scythelike pincers. His stench is horrible, and his sodden flesh is covered with bluish patches.

This is General Tetradian and his second-in-command, War Secretary General Gromsfed the Drowned. Normally stationed at Ungorth Reddick, Gromsfed came here to aid in coordinating the defense of Lemnara. Once a brilliant sea captain and devotee of Demogorgon, Gromsfed's fleet was drawn through a maelstrom into the aquatic realm of Shadowsea. Unable to escape, the captain drowned. He was returned to Gaping Maw later by Dagon in his current undead form as a gift to Demogorgon. Despite his aquatic subtype, Gromsfed retains a phobia of open water. To utilize his tactical brilliance, Demogorgon removed him from his shipboard command and appointed him as his secretary of war to coordinate the defense of the Gaping Maw as well as raids against the Prince of Demons's many enemies.

Energy Drain (Su) Any living creature hit by Tetradian's tail slap gains 1d4 negative levels. For each negative level bestowed, Tetradian heals 5 points of damage if the amount of healing is more than the damage he has taken. He gains any excess as temporary hit points. It's a DC 37 Fortitude save to remove one of these negative levels.

Gaze Attack (Su) Tetradian's gaze is the equivalent of a thorn monster spell (WotC DC 32 negates; with a range of 30 feet).

Rot (Su) Any living creature touched by Tetradian's tentacles must succeed at a DC 37 Fortitude save or its flesh and bones begin to rot. The creature takes 1d6 points of Constitution damage immediately and 1 point of Constitution damage every hour thereafter until it dies or a remove disease spell is cast. The spell stops further damage, but lost Constitution points return only with natural healing and cannot be restored with magic.

Summon Tana'ri (Sp) Once per day, Tetradian can automatically summon 1d8 vrocks, 1d6 hezrous, 1d4 glabrezu, 1d3 naishneesh, 1 man'ith, or 1 ualo.

Deep Water Adaptation (Ex) Gromsfed is immune to water pressure damage from deep water

Disease (Su) Victims of this supernatural disease grow lethargic and feeble as their muscles and skin turn blue like a drowned corpse. Bluerot—weapon or natural attacks, Fortitude DC 26, incubation period 1 minute, damage 1d8 Strength. If Strength is reduced to 0 it deals 1d8 Con. A victim that dies of bluerot rises as a drowned one at the next sunset. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Hivemind (Ex) Gromsfed can communicate telepathically with other drowned ones to a distance of 10 miles.

Improved Grab (Ex) To use this ability Gromsfed must hit a creature at least one size category smaller with a pincer attack. He can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity. If he wins the grapple check, he establishes a hold and can make vorpal pincer attacks against the held creature in subsequent rounds. He can hold a creature in his pincers without being considered grappled, without taking the usual penalties for grappling, and without taking the usual -20 penalty on his grapple check.

Fear Aura (Su) As a free action, Gromsfed can produce a fear effect that functions like a fear spell (caster level 20th except that it affects all creatures within a 30-foot radius (Will DC 27). Any creature that successfully saves cannot be affected by the fear aura for 24 hours. This is a mind-affecting fear effect. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Nauseating Appearance (Su) Gromsfed's appearance is supernaturally horrifying. Alliving creatures within 20 feet that can see him in his natural form must make a Fortitude save (DC 27) or be nauseated for 1 round. A new saving throw is required for all creatures in the area each round. This is a mind-affecting effect. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Rend (Ex) If Gromsfed hits a single target with both pincers, they latch onto the opponent's body and tear the flesh. This attack deals 2d6+18 points of damage. He cannot use this ability in conjunction with improved grab, so he typically uses this attack on creatures too large for him to grapple.

See Invisibility (Su) This ability functions as a see invisibility spell except it is always active and its range extends to the limits of Gromsfed's vision.

Soulsense (Su) Gromsfed constantly senses the presence of intelligent life in a 60-foot cone-shaped emanation. This ability functions identically to detect undead, save that it allows him to detect the auras of living creatures with Intelligence scores of at least 3.

Summon Tanar'ri (Sp) Once per day, Gromsfed can automatically summon 4d10 quasits, 1d6 hexruses, 2 nalfeshnees, 2 glabrezus, or 1 marilith. This ability is the equivalent of a 9th-level spell.

Sunlight Powerlessness (Ex) Gromsfed is powerless in natural sunlight (not a problem on Gaping Maw), unless it is filtered through at least 1 foot of water. If caught in sunlight, he cannot attack and can take only a single move action each round.

Tribal Frenzy (Ex) Gromsfed can spur other nearby demons into a primal frenzy, granting a red demon within 30 feet a +4 enhancement bonus to the Strength score, but dealing 1 damage to them each round for every Hit Die they possess.

This ability can be activated at will as a standard action and once activated lasts as long as Gromsfed continues to maintain it (a free action).

Vorpal Pincers (Su) If Gromsfed begins a turn with a creature held in his pincers, he can make one vorpal pincers attack against that opponent each round. This attack has a +29 attack bonus and deals 2d6+20/19–20 points of damage with a successful attack. On a critical hit, the pincers sever the opponent's head from its body.

Tactics (Gromsfed only). If Tetradian is not present due to a conflict with his clone brother Bagromar, only Gromsfed is encountered here. Unlike Tetradian, Gromsfed has no interest in chatter—he immediately attacks the PCs if reduced to less than 30 hit points. He attempts to teleport to Lemoniax to recover, but this has the same effect on the Demon Horde in the short run as if the PCs killed him.

Tactics (Tetradian and Gromsfed present): While Gromsfed is obviously startled by the PCs' sudden appearance, Tetradian seems mildly amused—as if he was possibly expecting the PCs. Unless the PCs initiate immediate hostilities, Tetradian addresses them civilly and calmly introduces them to the war-secretary general. Tetradian recognizes the party from the reports of spies who have been shadowing them for the last few months. He also knows them from their recent encounter with Bagromar, whether his clone brother survived or not.

Like his clone twin, Tetradian fancies himself the dominant commander of Demogorgon's armies. He sees in the PCs something that could shift the balance of power in his favor if utilized properly. Yet before any deal can be struck with Tetradian, he must first take care of a potential witness against him—Gromsfed. After his almost pleasant introductions, Tetradian calmly orders Gromsfed to slay the foolish intruders and then returns to studying the reports on his desk, only occasionally glancing up to observe events in the battle.

Gromsfed takes to the order with glee but once he drops to less than 30 hit points he flees to Tetradian's side to beg the general for aid. At this point, General Tetradian joins the battle, but as allies to the PCs. Gromsfed attempts to teleport to Abyss to report about Tetradian's apparent treason to Demogorgon, so the PCs and Tetradian have, at best, only a round to finish off the in lead demon. Yet even if Gromsfed escapes, Demogorgon is busy battling Orcus—no immediate repercussions occur (and Tetradian likely tracks him down to finish the job before Gromsfed gets Demogorgon's attention in any event).

Once Gromsfed is dealt with, Tetradian's calm returns and he invites the PCs to have a seat once they are finished looting their victim. Tetradian's attitude at this point depends on how the encounter with Bagromar ended in the last adventure. If Bagromar was slain, Tetradian's initial attitude is indifferent; otherwise he is unfriendly. If the PCs can adjust Tetradian's attitude to helpful, he is willing to withdraw his horde to Lemoriax, as long as the PCs can show some benefit to him as a result as well as providing reassurances that they do not wish to overthrow Demogorgon—the savage tide doesn't really matter to Tetradian (in fact, he worries about what it might do to the power structure of Gaping Maw).

Development: If the PCs destabilize the Demos Horde by simply killing its commanders, it doesn't take long for the demons to turn on themselves in a violent riot as lesser commanders attempt to seize control of the horde. This is the sign Quah Nomag is waiting for—he sends in both of his legions to assault the horde and within a matter of minutes, breaks its back. Demons allied with the horde teleport away in droves, and the few loyalists who remain behind are slaughtered quickly and mercilessly; their bodies are mated and recruited to swell the legion's ranks by the necromancers.

The Savage Tide (BI 23 or 24). The disruption of the Demos Horde is only half the problem—the interdicted zone remains regardless of the horde's fate. Quah Nomag readies his legions for the siege of Lemoriax, but until the PCs do something to disrupt the zone he refuses to begin.

If the Demos Horde was mad enough to infiltrate, Lemoriax is suicide. The capital city of Gaping Maw, Lemoriax is also one of the most densely populated pits of demonic evil in the Abyss. The city's burning streets and twisted towers are home to well over three million demons, and untold more monsters and necromancers dwell in the catacombs and sewers that stretch for miles beneath the planar metropolis. Infiltrating the city is more than an almost certain and of itself—it is a death sentence and likely something that the PCs simply don't have the time or resources to attempt if they wish to prevent the Savage Tide.

The interdiction zone was created recently by Demogorgon, one of several adjustments to Gaping Maw made after the Prince of Demons finally admitted to himself that the rumors of an army massing against him had some basis in fact. Normally, mortal intervention could have little effect on the whims of a demon lord on his home plane, yet with the war in full swing, Demogorgon's resources are spread thin.

Although the tallest ziggurat in Lemoriax, Demogorgon's Throne, is the focus of the interdiction zone, and the destruction of the pyramid would probably result in the zone's collapse, the pyramid is approximately a mile from the city walls in all directions. Without the ability to teleport, any approach toward the pyramid is opposed by countless demons ranging from lowly mobs of dretch up to platoons of bar-lgura archers stationed atop mobile battlements on the shoulders of gunstro demons led by halor generals. An all-out assault on Demogorgon's Throne is beyond the scope of this adventure, but fortunately for the PCs there is a simpler way to disrupt the zone, for it is as much maintained by the Throne as by Demogorgon's will. If the PCs can create a shocking enough distraction at Lemoriax's walls, the interdiction zone falters and falls. And once Quah-Nomag's legions begin teleporting in, the influx of the enemy keeps the zone from returning. Any PC who uses magic to observe the strange auras of the interdiction zone (via detect magic, arcane sight, or the like) can make a DC 35 Spellcraft check to determine these facts, yet the method of creating such a distraction is left to their imagination. A party of 20th-level characters is quite capable of any number of distractions that suffice to disrupt Demogorgon's concentration on the zone at this point—the two most likely examples are detailed below.

Mass Destruction: If the PCs can destroy up to 200 HD in demons (of any combination) within a ten-minute span along Lemoriax's walls, the sudden wash of unexpected carnage is enough to distract Demogorgon long enough for Quah-Nomag's armies to teleport in.

Unleashing Obox-ob: If the PCs managed to capture the aspect of Obox-ob within the Iron Flask of Tuerny the Merciless in "Enemies Of My Enemy," the solution is simple. If the aspect is released at the walls of Lemoriax, he immediately realizes that it stands at the edge of his hated enemy's capital city and begins mercilessly slaughtering demonic guardians and running city walls before moving into the city itself. As long as the PCs do not approach Obox-ob too closely, they are ignored by the Prince of Vermin. While the aspect's assault on Lemoriax does not damage the city that much before the pressing mass of demonic demizens take the aspect of Obox-ob apart, the unexpected manifestation of yet another of Demogorgon's enemies on Gaping Maw is all that's required to cause his concentration to falter and to disrupt the interdiction zone. In fact the PCs can achieve this result by releasing Obox-ob anywhere within the zone, but unless they do so within the proximity of Lemoriax, the Prince of Vermin doesn't have an obvious target on which to vent his wrath, and immediately turns on the PCs. If they become necessary, stats for Obox-ob's CR 22 aspect can be found in Fiendish Codex I: HORN DUNGEON #149.

Development: If the PCs carry the Iron Flask of Tuerny the Merciless, Iggwily teleports to their side once the interdiction zone falls. Even if they accomplished this via other means and Obox-ob remains within the flask, Iggwily congratulates the PCs on their progress before demanding they hand over the flask. If they protest, she reminds them that each of them owes her a favor for the aid she has provided them to this point, and that relinquishing the flask to her absolves one of them of this favor. Iggwily has big plans for Tuerny's Flask, and if the PCs resist, she has no qualms about taking the flask by force. If they become necessary, Iggwily's stats can be found on pages 50–51 of DUNGEON #149—hopefully the PCs know better than to anger the Witch Queen.

PART THREE: TO STEM THE TIDE

The true tests awaiting the PCs, however, are not to be found on the field of battle, but at an ancient edifice perched upon the shores of the Brine Flats. This is Wat Dagon, an ancient temple that predates Demogorgon's habitation of the Gaping Maw. Constructed during the time-misted ages of the obyriths in tribute to the obyrith lord Dagon, the edifice remained behind after Dagon's retreat to the lightless depths of the Shadowsea. When Demogorgon claimed Gaping Maw as his own, he discovered Wat Dagon already in ruins. The canny Prince of Demons explored it, and in so doing came into contact with Dagon for the first time. The alliance born of that initial encounter has since become one of Demogorgon's greatest assets, for the secrets revealed to him by Dagon have been potent revelations indeed.

It was in Wat Dagon that Demogorgon learned how to construct shadow pearls, and it is within the temple's heart that the master pearl, a device capable of triggering the shadow pearls on the Material Plane, can be found. Yet reaching its chamber may prove to be the most difficult and dangerous task the PCs have ever faced for Wat Dagon is its own realm, with its own rules and reality. Even before the PCs can enter the structure, two things bar their progress. First, the interdiction zone that covers the region around Lemoriax also wards Wat Dagon, effectively sealing all entrance into the structure (which is, itself, a demiplane). Bringing down the interdiction zone removes this barrier, but there remains another obstacle—Demogorgon's armies may be engaged elsewhere on Gaping Maw, but that doesn't mean he left the approach to Wat Dagon undefended.

The Battle of Wat Dagon (EL 22)

The land approach to Wat Dagon is the least guarded, with the sea beyond practically boiling with armies of octachutls, fiendish krakens, and other sea monsters. In any event, the only entrance into Wat Dagon is via the double doors at area 1.

With the exception of the old road, the ground in this region is muddy and wet, counting as difficult terrain for creatures not under a freedom of movement effect. The stream that winds through the region is at the bottom of a five-foot-deep gully; it's a DC 10 Climb check to move into or out of this gully. The stream itself is highly acidic—a splash does 1d6 acid damage while a creature standing in the five-foot-deep stream takes 10d6 acid damage a round. The air in the gully to a distance of 10 feet from either edge is poisonous as well—any creature in this area must make a DC 20 Fortitude save or take 2d6 Constitution damage (initial and secondary damage is the same).

An area about a hundred feet from Wat Dagon has been fenced off by stone walls. This corral once held a large number of undead warbeasts that have since been sent to aid the battle elsewhere.

Creatures: Demogorgon has entrusted the defense of Wat Dagon to one of his most infamous minions—the first death knight, Saint Kargoth the Betrayer. While the majority of Kargoth's armies fight elsewhere, he has hand-picked the demons and creatures to defend Wat Dagon. The least of these defenders are those stationed outside of Wat Dagon's walls.

The exterior defense consists of three chasme sentinels (fly-like demons with hooked claws and long, hornlike proboscises), four nabassu mercenaries (yellow-eyed gargoyle-like demons), and four powerful ghost archers created from the bodies of troglodyte cultists who gave their lives in order to become undead minions of Demogorgon. Although the ghosts resemble undead troglodytes, they have the same base statistics as normal ghosts. Saint Kargoth himself has taken up position inside Wat Dagon, leaving the command of his forces out here in the hands of one of his most competent generals, the nezrou Urba.

Tactics: Since the interior of Wat Dagon is effectively on another plane, there's no real way for any alarms raised out here to alert the denizens within. Still, the demons and undead stationed here do their best to guard the region. The chasmes patrol on the landward side of the acid creek while the nabasus stand guard near Urbala's tent and the empty corral. The four ghastr archers hide in foxholes along the seaward side of the creek. As soon as any one of these groups spots the PCs, they shriek out an alarm to alert the others and Urbala (who lounges inside of his tent).

All of the demons attempt to summon aid on the first round of battle, while the ghastrs take their first round to begin firing arrows at any PCs in range. All of the demons and undead attempt to stay out of melee if possible, using ranged attacks and spell-like abilities against the intruders. The sole exception to this is Urbala, the corpulent nezrou uses empowered unholy blights and chaos hammers only when he isn't able to engage foes in melee. The guardians here fight to the death, again with the exception of Urbala. If reduced to less than 30 hit points, the nezrou attempts to enter Wat Dagon to alert his allies and commander within.

Approaching Wat Dagon

A turgid sea of dark water froths along the desolate shoreline under a rolling sky of green clouds and alien moons. But upon the shore, seemingly on the verge of falling into the water, is an ominous edifice that appears to be a walled temple compound, though its once-vibrant walls are now cracked and grimed from eons of exposure to the acid sea wind. Tall, conical domes rise above the temple, surrounding a vast stone dome at the center. Swirling eddies of vapor and twisting clouds spiral along the stony surface of the structure to give the entire building a blurry facade, almost as if it were nothing more than a mirage.

Although visible from Gaping Maw, what appears on the shore here is merely a projection of Wat Dagon. A character who walks up to the building's sides finds the walls immaterial and ghostly—if someone steps through a wall, he immediately emerges from the opposite side. The only part of Wat Dagon that is "real" on Gaping Maw is its front doors. Wat Dagon itself exists entirely within the boundaries between the Abyss and Shadowsea; it is effectively a demiplane within the Abyss.

As such, it can only be accessed via a single portal—the entrance located at area 1. The interior of Wat Dagon is not connected to the astral plane or the plane of shadow and thus spells that utilize those planes (including all spells of the teleportation subschool) do not function inside of the structure. Demogorgons will prevent any other creature from using gate to force an opening into Wat Dagon, and summoning spells require a DC 30 caster level check to function.

The walls, roofs, and floors of the complex look and feel like stone, but are actually physical manifestations of the edge of the demiplane. This material cannot be breached by mortal magic.

Unless otherwise noted, the rooms of the temple are not illuminated. Ceilings are 20 feet high, and doors are composed of a hard, dry wood. Unlike the walls, they can be destroyed normally, yet unless otherwise noted, they do not have locks.

Finally, the entirety of Wat Dagon has become suffused with the unholy power of the savage tide. Upon entering Wat Dagon (and again every 10 minutes thereafter), a creature must make a DC 20 Will save to resist being transformed into a savage creature. Incorporeal creatures, constructs, elementals, oozes, outsiders, plants, undead, and vermin are immune to this effect—any other creature that succumbs immediately gains the savage creature template (Dungeon #140, page 47). (If you don't have this resource, the savage tide instead transforms the victim into a half-fiend without the spell-like abilities.) Creatures that become savage no longer honor old friendships or allegiances, and the consuming need to feed and murder forces them to fight one-time allies and enemies alike to the death. Greater restoration can restore a savage creature to its normal state, provided the caster can make a caster level check with a DC equal to 10 + 1/2 the savage creature's Hit Dice + the savage creature's Charisma modifier. A miracle or wish automatically restores the creature to normal. A savage creature that is killed and then brought back to life loses the effects of the template as well.

1 The Great Entrance of Wat Dagon

Wide wooden gates, moldy with age and banded with corroded strips of metal do little to bar entrance into the complex. They stand unsecured beneath a stone arch, looking as though an errant breeze could push them open. Beyond can be seen a short entry lane that passes through the gatehouse before opening into a courtyard beyond. Red ties cover the gatehouse exterior as well as the walls stretching to either side, though in many places individual ties have fallen away to reveal the stone beneath. A steep roof of green clay tiles rising in a series of ragged points tops this gatehouse.

The gates swing open easily at a touch—there's no indication on entry that a character is moving across a planar boundary. The interior of the gatehouse is shadowy and floored with a layer of gravel. Empty rooms, one-time guard posts, open on either side—both are currently empty. A 45-foot-high veranda runs along the inner side of the gatehouse supported by intricately carved posts.

2 Courtyard (EL 20)

While this courtyard seems at first to be open to the air, a glance upward creates an unsettling sense of vertigo, for forty feet above the contents of the room are reflected down to the smallest pebble, as if the ceiling were an immense and perfect mirror twenty feet above.

The main entrance to the building—a corroded door of beaten bronze—sits in the wall opposite the gatehouse. Squatting on a ledge above these ten-foot-tall doors is a horrific statue of a creature not quite eel or shark or octopus. A wooden frame holding a large copper bowl stands to the left of the entrance. A smaller frame holds a sus-pendent log to serve as a sinker for sounding the bell. At either end of the courtyard are tall, circular towers with conical golden domes. Archways, five feet off the ground, open along the walls to provide access to the chamber within. Just to the side of the gatehouse sits a small, ornamental pond overgrown with deformed lily pads and algae. A statue of a fat froglike demon sits cross-legged at the closest edge of the pool.

Finally, collapsed in a corner of the yard is an immense spider-like carcass the size of an elephant. It shows signs of heavy damage and deterioration due to exposure.

The ornamental pool is only two feet deep but the bottom is coated with a six-inch layer of green slime (Dungeon Master's Guide 76). A DC 21 Knowledge (arcana) check identifies the spiderlike corpse as a destroyed retriever—in fact, it is the remains of Demogorgon's first attempt to craft one of these constructs.
depicts Dagon, recognizable with a DC
30 Knowledge (the planes) check.

The ceiling above is an impenetrable barrier between Wat Dagon and a duplicate chamber above—the "reflections" the PCs see above are living duplicates of themselves created by the Abyss. Sound doesn't penetrate the barrier, nor can any mode of travel (magical or mundane).
The duplicates follow the actions the PCs take, but not quite as exactly as a reflection might. If a PC flies up to the ceiling 10 feet above and touches it, his duplicate does the same—and as soon as the two do so, the "reflection" shrieks soundlessly in horror and transforms into a deformed, savage version of the PC that scratches at the barrier between them, as if insane with a need to tear the true PC apart. The character who touched his "reflection" must then make a DC 25 Will save to avoid being stunned by the sudden assault of Abyssal energy on his mind—making a new saving throw each time he comes into contact with his savage duplicate.

Creatures: Saint Kargoth is not the only one of Demogorgon's favored minions sent to Wat Dagon to aid in its defense. The notorious giabrezu Ghorvash, one of Demogorgon's favored subordinates and something of a spymaster, has also come to aid in the site's defense. Ghorvash sees himself as the first line of defense for Wat Dagon, privately assuming he was assigned here because Demogorgon doesn't trust Saint Kargoth to do the job.

Ghorvash has a particular interest in the fate of the Vanderborens and their allies, for he is the demon responsible for corrupting a young Vanthus Vanderboren so many years ago, and for sealing the man's fate (see DUNGEON #146). When the PCs defeated Vanthus for a second time, the man's soul transformed into a larvae, a horrid wormlike manifestation of an evil soul. Ghorvash was waiting for him, and is now the proud owner of Vanthus's larval soul. He's taken great entertainment in tormenting Vanthus as he waits for the PCs to arrive, often doing so in the assumed form of Lavinia.
Worse, Ghorvash knows its only a matter of time before the PCs arrive at Wat Dagon, and has prepared an unsettling surprise for them. He's learned much of their accomplishments, and when they arrive in this courtyard, he greets them in Lavinia's form.

Ghorvash knows the PCs aren't push-overs and that they have plenty of magic available, and yet does what he can to make them think that they really are facing their friend and ally. As Lavinia, Ghorvash mocks the PCs, calling them naïve fools and claiming that she had plotted these events from the start simply to see Vanthus's humiliating defeat and aid Demogorgon in seeing his goal—after all, by keeping the PCs distracted with Farshore and "pretending" to be captured, she kept the PCs from where they were truly needed, in civilization, seeking out the shadow pearls and preventing them from spreading so far as they did. If the PCs confront Ghorvash with the truth, he shrugs and assumes his natural form, then claims to be surprised it took the PCs "this long" to
goes on to claim that he's been masquerading as Lavinia for months; he prefers to let the PCs draw their own conclusions as to when he assumed her form, but if pressed, he decides not to push things too far and claims to have taken her form at Divided's Ire, using the PCs to engineer his escape. He claims the real Lavinia is long dead.

Of course, all of these claims are lies.
What aren't lies are Ghorvash's tales of how he tempted Vanthus, stories he gleefully reveals to the PCs if they ask.
If they doubt him, he shrugs again and then uses telekinesis to pull the larval Van-thus out of his cage in area 3, hurling the shrieking pethoner at them and inviting them to, "Ask him yourselves!"

Detect Mortals (Su) This ability duplicates the effect of detect undead (CL 15th), except that mortals are detected. For purposes of this ability and other mortal hunter abilities, a "mortal" is any creature not of the outsider, undead, construct, or fey types.

Mortal Hunting (Ex) Ghorvash gains a +3 bonus on Bluff, Listen, Sense Motive, Spot, and Survival checks made against mortals. He also gains a +3 bonus on attack rolls and weapon damage rolls against mortals.

Mortal Skin (Su) Ghorvash can graft bits of flesh to his body. Once per day, he can assume the form of a mortal creature. If the flesh used is from the exact individual being mimicked, the duration is permanent. If the flesh is from a being of the same type of the form adopted, the duration is 1 hour. If the flesh is not the same type as the form adopted, the duration is 10 minutes. In all cases, Ghorvash can dismiss the ability as a standard action. Otherwise, this ability works as polymorph. Ghorvash currently has numerous pieces of flesh grafted to his arms, one of which is a patch of flesh procured from Lavinia vanderboren purchased from the merchant Ilanth during Lavinia's stay as a prisoner of Divided's re (through the use of a non-outsider proxy—Ghorvash didn't want to become a permanent addition to Divided's lie).

Smite Mortals (Su) Once per day, Ghorvash can smite a mortal creature with one normal melee attack.

Spurn Mortal Magic (Su) Ghorvash applies his Wisdom modifier as an addition bonus on all saving throws against spells and spell-like abilities used by mortals.

Spells Severed of Ghorvash's spells are from the Book of Vile Darkness. If you don't use this book in your game, make the following adjustments to his spells: call dretch horde becomes summon monster IV, evil eye becomes desecrate, flesh ripper becomes vampiric touch, heartache becomes lesser confusion, mirror sending becomes clairvoyance/clairaudience, morality undone becomes charm monster, resonating resistance becomes spell immunity, unraveling gaze becomes domination, vile laque becomes contagion, wither limb becomes shatter, and wrack becomes blindness/deafness.

Feats Boost Spell-Like Ability Book of Vile Darkness 47) allows Ghorvash to boost the saving throw DC for confusion by +2 up to three times a day. Mortalbane Book of Vile Darkness 49) allows Ghorvash to enhance unholy blight up to five times a day so that it inflicts +2d6 damage when used against mortals but only half damage against outsiders, undead, and constructs.

Tactics Ghorvash eventually grows tired of tormenting the PCs, and if they don't attack him first, he does so after first reverting to his true form. He activates a quicken mirror image on the first round of combat along with reverse gravity to catch as many of the PCs as he can. Characters who fall up to the "ceiling" come into contact with their reflections, with repercussions as detailed above. Each round a PC remains in contact with his duplicate, he must make a new saving throw to avoid being stunned.

Ghorvash uses his spells and spell-like abilities against PCs stuck on the ceiling, reverting to melee attacks against those who avoid being stunned or falling up and who can reach him. He fights to the death, knowing that to fail

Vanthus

Demogorgon at this stage would be the less appealing of the two ends.

3 Chedis

A curtain of heavy knotted ropes hangs before the entrance into a round chamber with a conical roof rising thirty feet above. The interior walls of the chamber are adorned with all manner of inscriptions in Abyssal. The remains of a small altar and kneeling bench sit near the back of the room.

These small buildings are chedis, or shrines. They once held relics sacred to Dagon, though they were looted ages ago. Now they stand abandoned, although Ghorvash has been using the one opposite the dead retriever as a place to torment Vanthus.

Creature: Vanthus Vanderboren, his soul now transformed into a twitching, shrieking larva, lies pinned to a wax tablet on the altar by several long rusty needles. Horrifiedly Vanthus is one of those few larva who retains knowledge of his life, and upon seeing the PCs begs for redemption and salvation. You can use Vanthus to fill the PCs in on any bits of backstory involving the treacherous brother that remain to be explained. Rescuing Vanthus from his wretched state requires a miracle, true resurrection, or wish, (or just resurrection if the PCs recover his body from area 13). Whether or not his claims that he now seeks redemption are honest is left for you to decide—if resurrected, he has lost his Lemorian half-fiend template. It may be more merciful for the PCs to simply put him out of his misery once and for all.

4. Dagon's Gate (EL 13)

The floor of this antechamber is inlaid with a complex pattern of blue and green tiles that almost gives it the illusion of the surface of a placid pool of water.

Trap: One round after a creature enters this area, its lungs fill with nearly freezing seawater. The target must make two DC 25 Fortitude saving throws. The first determines whether or not the victim is stunned for 1d4 rounds by the sudden sensation of lungs filled with freezing water (creatures with any resistance or immunity to cold automatically make this saving throw). The second is to determine if the victim can expel the water from his lungs before he begins to drown—if the victim is stunned, this saving throw suffers a -4 penalty. Failure indicates the victim drops to 0 hp at the start of the next round and thereafter continues to drown. Water-breathing creatures, of course, do not need to worry about drowning from this trap.

Breath of Dagon: CR 13, magic device; location trigger; automatic reset, Fortitude DC 25 resists stunning, Fortitude DC 25 resists drowning; Search DC 40; Disable Device DC 40.

Development: Characters who succumb to this trap are likely to alert both groups of ghost archers in the nearby rooms.

5 Viharn (EL 18)

Three ornately carved benches stand here with a few small incense burners and lit tapers providing a sharp fragrance of rotting seaweed. A great net composed of rusty chain links hangs from the ceiling overhead like some kind of awning.

This chamber served as a gathering area for meditation by the temple's guardians. The chain netting above is a 20-foot-square fishing net once used for catching the great leviathans of the deep off the nearby coast—despite its ominous appearance, it is harmless.

Creatures: Saint Kargoth has stationed a half-dozen ghost archers in this room. The undead wait loyally and patiently for the death knight's command, although if they notice victims succumb to the breath of Dagon trap in area 4, they shriek in delight (alerting the ghosts in area 6 and the occupant of area 8) as they race into area 4 to attack drowning PCs.

6. Abandoned Viharn (EL 17)

This room is bare and dusty. A pair of battered wooden benches sit against the walls.

Ghost Archers (4): hp 115 each; see page 79.

7 Watchtowers

Stairs rise thirty-five feet into a single chamber at the top of each of these towers. These chambers lie beneath conical golden roofs and feature several narrow windows that look out over Gaping Maw to one side and into the swirling depths of Shadowsea to the other. These windows are transparent planar barriers—they allow observation from either side, but not transport.

A character who peers into Shadowsea has a cumulative 25% chance per round of catching a glimpse of an immense, horrific shape waiting in the dark waters. This is none other than Dagon, Prince of the Darkened Depths, lurking in the nearby waters of Shadowsea and ready to emerge into Gaping Maw when the PCs challenge Demogorgon. Dagon does not notice any PC peering through these windows, but the mere sight of the abyssal lord is enough to affect the observer with his form of madness.

Any creature that observes Dagon must make a DC 31 Will save. Failure indicates the creature develops an overwhelming fear of the ocean and its depths. As long as the ocean is in sight, the creature is distracted with fear and takes a -4 penalty on Will saving throws. He also takes a -4 penalty on attack rolls against creatures with the aquatic subtype. On the first round of combat against a creature with the aquatic subtype, the character must make a DC 31 Will save or be paralyzed with fear for 1d6 rounds. A heal or greater restoration spell can cure the effects if the caster succeeds on a DC 33 caster-level check. Miracle or wish automatically cures the condition.

A creature that makes this save is immune to Dagon's form of madness for 24 hours. This is a mind-affecting fear ability that does not affect chaotic evil outsiders. Even creatures that are immune to fear can be affected by Dagon's form of madness, although they suffer its effects for only 1 hour if they fail their saving throw—for all other creatures, the effect is permanent until magically cured.

8 Bot (EL 23)

A massive stone dome hangs forty feet overhead. At its apex is a large opening leading into the dark interior of the temple's central golden spire. Beneath this opening has been inscribed a magical circle with a small cauldron at its center. Tall wooden pillars support the chamber's dome. Set in between these pillars are wooden poles upon which have been mounted crude wooden fetishes.

This bot, or "most holy prayer room," was once a central place of Dagon worship in the Age before Ages. The darkened opening leading to the vault above has a 1-foot-wide lip surrounding its inner edge. The circle beneath is identifiable with a DC 30 Knowledge (arcana) check as some type of chaotic transmitting focus. A DC 40 check identifies it as the site from which the savage tide will be unleashed. Unfortunately it is indelibly inscribed by the morpheic will of Demogorgon at caster level 30. If somehow destroyed, it reforms after 1 round. The cauldron is filled with briny water and is necessary for the activation ritual of the master pearl. The five fetishes are recognizable as a jaguar, a sea turtle, a chameleon, a geyser, and a tyrannosaurus. A DC 15 Knowledge (local) check is enough to realize that the craftsmanship resembles those of the Olman of the Isle of Dread.

Creature: Saint Kargoth the Betrayer, the first death knight created by Demogorgon, has chosen this chamber as his arena for defense. He calmly awaits the arrival of the PCs, whom he knows are near, but is eager to leave Wat Dagon to return to his fortress of Kolarenth on Caping Maw—as powerful as he is, the death knight finds the locale uncomfortable and menacing.

A corrupted human paladin who once served in the Great Kingdom, Saint Kargoth betrayed his brothers to quickly ascend through the ranks of demonic hierarchy. He has come to view Demogorgon as his lord and god, and is, in many ways, the demon prince's most loyal follower. Of the legions of demons who serve Demogorgon, Kargoth alone would never consider betraying him. Additional information about Kargoth's history, including full details on his fall from grace and ties to the demon-spawn Arendagrost, can be found in issues #290–#291 of DRAGON magazine, although they are not relevant to his role here as Wat Dagon's defender.

Abyssal Blast (Su) St. Kargoth can unleash a blast of eldritch fire once per day, filling a 20-foot-radius spread anywhere within a range of 1,120 feet. The blast deals 18d6 damage (half fire, half divine power); a DC 32 Reflex save halves the damage.

Fear Aura (Su) Creatures of less than 5 HD within 15 feet must make a DC 32 Will save or become panicked.

Flight (Su) St. Kargoth's fly speed is supernatural in nature, functioning similarly to that granted by a fly spell, save that it cannot be dispelled.

Turn Immunity (Ex) St. Kargoth cannot be affected by turn undead.

Unholy Toughness (Ex) St. Kargoth gains a bonus to his hit points equal to his Charisma modifier times his Hit Dice.

Inherent Bonuses St. Kargoth has a +4 inherent bonus to Strength and a +5 inherent bonus to Charisma.

Tactics: Saint Kargoth is one of the deadliest foes the PCs are destined to face as befits his history and role as the first of Demogorgon's death knights. If he hears the PCs enter area 4, he takes the time to cast freedom of movement, corrupt weapon, and unholy aura before stepping through the double doors into area 4 to join his ghast minions in the fight against the PCs. Kargoth activates his boots of speed on the first round of combat and begins the battle by casting horrid wilting or using his abyssal blast (taking care to hit as few ghosts as possible), but thereafter fights in melee. The death knight is unnervingly silent in combat, making no villainous proclamations and issuing no maniacal laughter—he is as cold and relentless in personality as he is in battle. Loyal to the end, Saint Kargoth fights to the death, confident that if Demogorgon survives what is to come, the Prince of Demons will restore him. And if the Prince of Demons is to fall, Kargoth would rather fall first.

9 Collapsed Hall

Halfway across the chamber the floor has cracked and sunken, creating a treacherous sieve down into churning waters. The western half is ten feet lower and rests at an angle to the rest of the room.

The door to area 10 is swollen with wetness and barely remains on its hinges, swinging open easily but only providing 1 foot of headroom between the surface of the water and the door jamb.

10. Mondhop (EL 20)

Murky water floods the entire chamber, save for a small ledge of rubble upon which rests a tattered nest of cloth and debris. Ancient stone shelves line the walls, mostly submerged with only a few items scattered upon their tops. The ceiling rises 10 feet above the surface of the water. A fitfully burning torch made of rushes is affixed to the south wall.

This was once the library of the temple, but the sacred texts once stored here have long since been moved to Abyss. The water is 12 feet deep. The torch is an everburning torch.

Creature: This room has been one man's home for the past thousand years, a man whose slavish devotion and dedication to Demogorgon is as full as any mortal could ever express. This is the O man shaman who discovered the first shadow pearl, and the first O man to fall under its influence—Nulonga. Old even before his devotion to Demogorgon began, Nulonga aided Demogorgon in the cultivation of the master pearl over the past millennium. Here in Wat Dagon, the man never ages, never grows tired or hungry and never wonders what might have been had he the will to resist the Demogorgon's lure so long ago.

Nulonga is an emaciated ruin of a man, both of his legs ending in stumps that bear the scars of crude stitching. His legs were his first sacrifice to the Prince of Demons so long ago—his immortal soul the next. His teeth are little more than rotten stumps sharpened to cracked points, and he carries the odor of decay about him, a manifestation of his unusual bond with death—if slain Nulonga's spirit slips like a parasite into the closest body, resurrecting in an undead shell. Nulonga has died countless times, and has used undead hosts to secure his own resurrection as many times. His death wish is Demogorgon's greatest gift and curse to the old man, ensuring his immortality at the cost of his eternal servitude. It is unlikely that the PCs will be able to kill the ancient shaman as long as Demogorgon lives unless they take care to destroy all of the bodies of defeated ghosts in Wat Dagon.

While Nulonga is quite dangerous, his role in the defense of Wat Dagon is minimal—he prefers to leave that job to Saint Kargoth and General Ghorvash. Yet if both of them are destroyed, Nulonga feels it in his bones, and realizes he's the last thing standing between the PCs and the master pearl.

Death Touch (Su): Nulonga can use an effect identical to that of slay living once per day (Fort DC 28 negates).

Death Wish (Su): As an immediate action, Nulonga can will his physical body to die. If struck by a lethal attack, he can elect to use this ability the instant before he dies. This ability frees his soul to inhabit any other humanoid corpse with a 1 mile at any time within the next 24 hours. That corpse animates as a juju zombie (see Forgotten Realms: Unapproachable East) but gains all of Nulonga's memories, spells cast, and special abilities (including death wish). Nulonga's soul is immediately aware of all suitable corpses with a 1 mile and can reach any of them instantly regardless of barriers or other magic that prevents possession, such as protection from evil. Once a body is vacated by Nulonga, he can no longer use it for possession. Given time, Nulonga's first act upon gaining a new body is to hack off his own leg to honor his bargains with the Prince of Demons.

Demogorgon's Will (Sp): Nulonga can call upon the Prince of Demons once per day to be granted a limited wish. The use of this ability requires 3 full rounds devoted to entreaties and prayers to Demogorgon before the limited wish is granted.

Dual Actions (Su): Twice per day, Nulonga can take two full rounds' worth of actions in the same round.

Hypnosis (Su): Once per day, Nulonga can produce an effect identical to that of the hypnotism spell (Will DC 28 negates), except it functions as a gaze attack with a range of 30 feet.

Metamagic Specialist: This aptitude allows Nulonga to apply metamagic feats to his spells without extending the time required to cast them. This ability replaces his ability to summon a familiar.

Reaching Touch (Su): Three times per day, Nulonga can cause his arms to stretch unnaturally like tentacles. This provides him an extra 5 feet of reach for 1 round.

Rotting Touch (Su): Three times per day, Nulonga can deal 1d6 points of Constitution damage as a touch attack.

Scales of Flesh (Ex): Nulonga's flesh is covered with fine scales that grant him a +4 natural armor bonus.

Summon Demon (Sp): Nulonga can summon a demon of 5 HD or less once per day. This functions as a summon monster spell cast by a 15th-level caster. Once per day he can also summon a demon of 10 HD or less. This ability is the equivalent of a 4th-level spell; the ability to summon a 10 HD demon is the equivalent of a 7th-level spell.

Touch of Fear (Su): Three times per day Nulonga can cause a creature he strikes with a touch attack to become frightened for 1d4 rounds. A successful DC 28 Will save means the creature touched is merely shaken for 1 round.

Two Personas (Ex): Whenever Nulonga is subjected to a mind-affecting attack that allows a saving throw, he makes two saving throws. Both saving throws must fail in order for the mind-affecting attack to affect him.

Feats: Thralldom to Demons allows Nulonga to gain a +1 luck bonus to one roll a day. Willful Deformity grants him a +2 deformity bonus on intimidate checks.

Tactics: As soon as Nulonga hears the sound of combat in Wat Dagon, he casts clairaudience/clairvoyance to observe events in area 8. Once Kargoth is defeated, Nulonga prepares for the inevitable by casting extended versions of fly, false life, resist energy (of a type he witnessed the PCs use), protection from law, and shield. Then he moves out to confront the PCs wherever they may be.

Once he encounters them, he shrieks curses in ancient Olman, flies up near the room's ceiling, and begins casting spells. Nulonga knows his body is fragile, and doesn't expect to last too long against the PCs, so he prefers to fight them using magic from his staff of necromancy (energy drain being his favorite attack); since once he is slain and returns to "life" in an undead body, he'll have to rely more heavily on his spells. Only if the PCs prove resistant to his staff does he resort to his spells.

Treasure: Among the various items scattered atop the shelves are the components of an alchemist's lab: an elixir of vision, a crude voodoo doll recognizable as War Secretary-General Gromsfeid with a needle through its head, a huge black pearl worth 500 gp, two defaced gold statuettes (one of Flaloc and one of Quetzalcoatl, worth 1,000 gp each), and a stone jar of black bile of the world (see DUNGEON #144).

11. Worm Tunnel (EL 20)

The tunnel beyond this archway is low and cramped, circular in cross-section, with floor, walls, and ceiling made of what looks unsettlingly like leather. These surfaces bear hundreds of thousands of words written in Abyssal, carved into the leathery substance in a tangled mass of interwoven spirals.

This "hallway" is in fact the body of a fiendish mottled worm (an aquatic variant of the purple worm) of monstrous proportions, its body cored out and preserved to create a coiling tunnel 5 feet in diameter. Although the preserved flesh has the flexibility and feel of leather, it's as tough as stone (hardness 8, hp 60 per 5-ft. section, Break DC 32). If the PCs break through the preserved hide into the surrounding room, they find merely an empty chamber full of dust and debris that once served as another sala in the temple. From the outside the purple worm is easily identifiable for what it actually is. The runes are prayers to Demogorgon interwoven with the magic of the trap that wards this chamber.

Creature: If four rounds after a creature enters this room, there are still creatures inside the tunnel, a potent magical effect activates and resurrects the ancient worm. The monster reflexively coils up into the room (into its 20-foot space), but any creatures inside of the hallway when this transformation occurs are automatically considered to be swallowed whole—any holes or damage inflicted on the worm's body before it resurrects is immediately healed upon its return to life. The worm immediately attacks any creatures not be already swallowed: the monster's narrow body and boneless structure allows it to squeeze through 5-foot-wide openings if it needs to pursue foes.

12. Boiling Pool

The floor of the chamber has collapsed, leaving a boiling pool of green water five feet below a rickety wooden bridge, its planks slippery with green mold and black mildew. The chamber is stifling, with clouds of sulfurous steam filling the room, preventing an accurate guess at the room's size or the eventual destination of the rickety bridge.

The water in this room comes from a portion of Shadowsea where volcanic vents heat the normally freezing water to boiling. As a result, the extreme heat in the room requires a Fortitude save every 10 minutes to avoid taking nonlethal damage as described on page 303 of the Dungeon Master's Guide. The water itself is 20 feet deep. Being splashed causes 1d6 points of fire damage; being totally immersed in boiling water causes 10d6 points of fire damage. The steam in the room functions as obscuring mist—creatures five feet away have concealment (20% miss chance), while those farther away have total concealment (50% miss chance). A character walking on the bridge must make a DC 12 Balance check; failure by 3 or more indicates the character has slipped and fallen into the boiling water below.

The door to area 13 is made of an ultrahard metal called obdurium, and is locked by an arcane lock spell (CL 20th). The door is also red-hot—contact with it causes 2d6 points of fire damage. The door is locked with an almost impossibly complex lock (Open Lock DC 50)—Nulonga carries the key on a cord around his neck, but the complexity of the lock means it takes four rounds to open it with the key. Open Lock attempts take 10 rounds. Unless the door is first cooled (Nulonga typically casts chill metal via his limited wish to do so), the somewhat fragile key must make a DC 20 Fortitude save each round (using the user's saving throw) to avoid melting.

13. Chamber of the Great One (EL 22)

Murky waters lap at the sloping shore that serves this room as a floor, giving off an acrid, rotten stench. In the shallows sits an enormous oyster, rising from the water like a massive shark's fin, its valves serrated and spiked and studded with razor-sharp horns. The blackened and pitted shell smokes as if had recently been exposed to great heat, and its interior is charred black as well rather than the expected opalescence of mother-of-pearl. Within, on a sithering bed of horror and alien flesh, rests a huge black pearl larger than a man's head, that pulses with black energy in which ghostly disembodied faces seem to shriek. A pair of four-foot-high wooden stakes with strips of leather hanging from their sharpened points protrude from the oily sand on the narrow beach near the monstrous shellfish.

The moment the room is entered and the party gets a quick look at the master pearl, the fiendish oyster senses intruders and snaps shut to protect its treasure. This fiendish giant oyster is the very one from which the original shadow pearl that brought down Thanaglan grew. Demogorgon transported it to the Abyss and has used it to grow a master pearl capable of detonating all of the shadow pearls simultaneously. If the pearl is triggered during the proper ritual in area 8, the savage energy released throughout the Material Plane is siphoned into the pearl and thence into Demogorgon—if this occurs, see Concluding the Adventure. Nulonga oversaw the slow process of this pearl's growth, providing it with the humanoid sacrifices necessary for its proper growth.

The oyster itself is as hard as adamantite. Attempts to pry it open require a fantastic Strength, and any creature that attempts to do so or who attacks it with a natural weapon, unarmed strike, or light weapon takes 1d6 points of slashing damage from the shell's many razor-edged horns. Knock won't open the shell, but dispel chaos or dispel evil forces its valves to fall open if the caster can succeed on a DC 35 caster level check. The oyster is a living creature, so antimagic has no effect on it.

Once the oyster's shell is destroyed or its valves forced open, the master pearl within can be snatched with ease. Of course, any non-chaotic evil creature that touches the master pearl is burned for 5d6 points of vile damage (Will DC 20 half)—telekinetics and other methods of remote manipulation can prevent this damage, but wearing heavy gauntlets or attempting to knock the pearl loose with a weapon offers no protection—its vile energies travel through whatever object is used against it to burn its aggressor. Vile damage can only be healed by magic cast within the area of a consecrate or hallow spell. Any creature that takes any vile damage from the master pearl must also make a DC 30 Will save to resist being transformed into a savage creature. As an artifact, the master pearl is immune to most mortal attacks, although a Mordenkainen's disjunction has the usual chance of destroying it. Barring its destruction, simply removing the master pearl from Wat Dagon is enough to stem the Savage Tide until Demogorgon can retrieve the pearl.

If the PCs haven't yet slain Nulonga, a familiar corpse greets them here: Vanthus Vanderboren's body (rebuilt by Demogorgon's will if his corporeal remains were destroyed in "Into the Maw") has been put on grisly display in this room, strung up between the two wooden stakes driven into the sand. If Nulonga has been killed, his soul possesses Vanthus's body and animates it as a jyru zombie.

Fiendish Giant Oyster: Hardness 20; hp 360; Open DC 34; Break DC 48; Fort

Creature: Upon inhabiting Vanthus's body, Nulonga easily wriggles free from the bonds and hacks off his legs on the razor-sharp edges of the fiendish oyster's shell. He then slides into the water on the far side of the oyster, lying in wait underwater for the PCs to arrive, casting Extended Fly, fuse ifc, resist energy, protection from law, and shield.

... wall of force to keep the PCs divided feebly against spellcasters, and flesh to stone or finger of death against other foes. He augments his attacks each round with quickened magic missiles, rays of enfeeblement, and blindness/deafness. If he is destroyed again Nulunga's spirit seeks out any other suitable humanoid bodies to possess—while Saint Kargoth was a half fiend in life, and thus, being an outsider, cannot be animated by Nulunga, the numerous troglodyte ghosts are all eligible bodies for him to return in. Nulunga takes time only to cast fly on himself in this case racing back to area 13 as quickly as he can to confront the PCs again. If they think to close the door, he uses a limited wish to open it with a knock spell, otherwise he waits impatiently for Demogorgon to arrive and joins his master in the last battle.

PART FOUR. LORD OF THE SAVAGE TIDE

Despite the number of distractions the PCs have thrown against Demogorgon, he triumphs over Orcus at about the same time the PCs enter Wat Dagon forcing the Prince of Undeath to retreat back to Thanatos to nurse his wounds (Orcus returns to Gaping Maw shortly thereafter, but arrives at a remote point in the Screaming Jungle and remains hidden—he simply wants to be on Gaping Maw if Demogorgon is defeated so he'll have a chance for the crown). Demogorgon then teleports to Lemnax to aid in the defense of his city—by this point, Gwynharwyf and Quah-Nomag's legions have penetrated the city's outer defenses and are causing incredible damage to the city.

Yet once the PCs reach the Chamber of the Great One, Demogorgon finally realizes the truth behind the attacks. They were not orchestrated by his archenemies Orcus and Gwynharwyf, but by a band of foolish mortals. His rage at the realization intense, he abandons Lemnax by casting gate to create a portal to area 13 in Wat Dagon. Through the gate can be seen the city of Lemnax in flames, armies of demons being driven deeper into its heart by the advance of Gwynharwyf's and Quah-Nomag's armies. Yet the sight of the Prince of Demons himself shouldering his way through the portal should

Creature: As Demogorgon enters Wat Dagon, his twin heads shrieking in rage, his overwhelming dual voices ring telepathically in the heads of all present: "Fools! At last you reveal yourselves to my wrath. The audacity of your ridiculous plan is almost enough to convince me to simply destroy you. But here I find you at this, the heart of my savage tide. Know that even as my minions crush the last of your palatial invasion, your own deaths will be neither quick nor painless. They will be works of wonder tortures to inspire the ages. You will, at my touch, become legends!"

At the height of his power, Demogorgon is a CR 33 creature with the resources of an Abyssal layer at his command. Yet if the PCs have done their jobs, what they face now is merely a shadow of the Prince of Demons' true might. A taxing battle with Orcus, the draining of power to maintain the interdiction zone, the recent loss of several key aspects (and possibly even clones), and the portion of his very life essence that he has placed into the master pearl in order to make his plan of harmony between his personalities work have all combined to weaken Demogorgon to the point that the PCs may actually have a chance against him.

The statblock for Demogorgon presented below represents him at full strength. Depending on how many different steps the PCs have successfully taken to distract and weaken him, the actual incarnation of the Prince of Demons they face may be much less deadly, although never less than a CR 33 menace. There are five things that the PCs can have done to weaken Demogorgon.

- Recruit Orcus: If the PCs secured Orcus' aid, the Prince of Undeath confronts Demogorgon at Abyss. While unable to defeat Demogorgon at this time, Orcus's efforts weaken him significantly.
- Slay Arendagrost: The destruction of one of Demogorgon's most powerful offspring causes a corresponding (but temporary) loss in his personal life force.
- Defeat Both Clones: If both Bagromar and Tetradam are slain and/or forced to turn traitor against Demogorgon, Demogorgon suffers a loss of his life force that, given several months, he can rebuild.

- Release Obox-ob: The Prince of Vermin is, perhaps the one thing Demogorgon fears. Even though only an aspect, Obox-ob's manifestation on Gaping Maw is incredibly demoralizing to the Prince of Demons.
- Malcanthet's Betrayal: If Malcanthet shares a bond with one of the PCs still, she can use that bond to telepathically lash out at Demogorgon as he appears in Wat Dagon. What the Queen of Succubi whispers to her soon-to-be ex lover is heard only by Demogorgon, but it causes him to falter for a moment, to almost slump in rejection and defeat, and then to roar in a terrible rage. He focuses the majority of his attacks on Malcanthet's proxy, but the demoralizing rebuke has done its damage.

Total the number of factors the PCs were able to achieve, each one of these successes effectively imparts two negative levels to Demogorgon that he cannot remove without several months of recuperation in Gaping Maw. These negative levels function somewhat differently than normal negative levels: they reduce his hit points by 5 + his Constitution modifier, reduce his spell resistance and natural armor bonus by 2 each, remove some of his spell-like abilities, reduce the save DCs of his attacks, and in some cases remove special abilities entirely.

* Dark Speech is a feat from Fiendish Codex. If you don't have access to this book, replace this feat with Awesome Blow.

Aura of Demonic Command (Su) As Prince of Demons, Demogorgon exudes an aura of demonic command to a radius of 20 feet. With a few exceptions, no demons within this area can take any action without Demogorgon's permission. Demogorgon reflexively grants permission to act on the demon's turn. An affected demon in this area must make a DC 30 Will save whenever he attempts to take any action that Demogorgon does not permit. Success indicates that he may take the action, while failure means that the demon not only loses that action but also takes 2d6 points of Charisma damage as Demogorgon's wrath tears into his mind. Demons within the area that Demogorgon are not aware of may act as they will, as can any demon with the Abyss-Bound Soul feat keyed to any other demon lord, although Demogorgon automatically recognizes rival Abyss-Bound Souls as soon as they enter his aura of demonic command. The Abyss Bound Soul test is detailed in Fiendish Codex I: Hordes of the Abyss. Demon lords are not affected by Demogorgon's aura of Demonic Command. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Dual Action (Ex) Demogorgon, having two heads with distinct intelligences and personalities, can take two rounds' worth of actions in any given round, as if he were two creatures.

Energy Drain (Su) Any living creature hit by Demogorgon's tail slap gains 1d6 negative levels. For each negative level bestowed Demogorgon heals 5 points of damage, and the amount of healing is more than the damage he has taken, he gains any excess as temporary hit points. 1 is a DC 46 Fortitude save to remove a negative level. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Gaze (Su) Each of Demogorgon's heads has its own gaze attack. Any creature within 60 feet of the demon lord must make two successful DC 39 Will saving throws each round at the beginning of its turn: the first save against Demogorgon's beguiling gaze and the second one against his insanity gaze. The save DC is Charisma-based. Demogorgon can actively target foes with his beguiling gaze and insanity gaze, in which case each gaze requires a standard action to activate. As a standard action, he may lock the gaze of both heads on a single target and use a special hypnosis effect. He cannot use his hypnosis gaze during the same round in which he uses his beguiling gaze, his insanity gaze or both.

Insanity Gaze: The gaze attack of Hethradrah, Demogorgon's right head, is the equivalent of an insanity spell.

Hypnosis Gaze: Only a target with 15 Hit Dice or more is allowed a save to avoid the gaze of both Demogorgon's heads. Those who succumb to this gaze are affected as though by a hypnotism spell.

Item Master (Ex) Demogorgon can use any magic item, even spells, compulsion items such as wands or scrolls. He can also create any magic item or construct as though he had the necessary feats and prerequisite spells or other requirements.

Mage Armor (Su) Demogorgon is constantly surrounded by an aura of force that provides armor protection identical to a mage armor spell that cannot be dispelled.

Rot (Su) Any living creature touched by Demogorgon's tentacles must succeed on a DC 46 Fortitude save, or its flesh and bones rot away. The creature takes 1d8 points of Constitution damage immediately and 2 points of Constitution damage every hour thereafter until it dies or a remove disease spell is cast. This spell stops further damage on a target if the caster makes a DC 30 Caster Level check. The save DC is Constitution-based.

Summon Demon (Sp) Demogorgon can summon demons to his side to serve him, using a variant of most tanarri's summon tanarri spell-like ability. He can summon any number of demons with this ability as a standard action, as long as all the demons summoned are of the same type—if Demogorgon wishes to summon a succubus and a na-feshnee, he'll need to use this ability two separate times. He can summon up to 30 Hit Dice of demons per day with this ability. Although he can summon any type of demon (including ioumaras, obyriths, and demons without a subrace), he cannot summon unique demons or demon lords using this ability. This ability is the equivalent of a 9th-level spell (CL 20th).

Symbol (Sp) Demogorgon can cast any symbol spell once per day as a spell-like ability.

True Seeing (Su) Demogorgon has the effects of true seeing constantly active; this ability cannot be dispelled.

Constant Spell-Like Abilities Since he can use fly, unholy aura, and greater magic fong at will as spell-like abilities, these spells are always in effect when he's encountered. The effects of these spells and spell-like abilities are included in the stat block above.

Tactics: As Demogorgon creates his gate, Gwynharwyf notices the portal open from the field of battle. Eager to aid in the fight against her old enemy, Gwynharwyf assumes whirlwind form on the surprise round. She rolls a +11 initiative check on the first round of combat—if she beats Demogorgon, she can take a run action to move through the gate and into area 13 to aid the PCs as well (note that she can automatically tumble through Demogorgon's square and avoid attacks of opportunity as she passes through the gate). Gwynharwyf's stats appear in Dungeon #149—if she makes it into area 13, you should hand the PCs a copy of her stats and allow them to roll her at her ability to come. Gwynharwyf enters the battle already wounded, at only 200 hit points and with only one mighty rage remaining, and having expended both cure serious wounds spell-like abilities for the day.

Another individual notices Demogorgon's act as well—watching the battle of Lemnax from a safe distance, Iggwily notices the gate open. She teleports to the main entrance of Wat Dagon and enters the structure via that route, not wishing to get caught up in a battle against Demogorgon but eager to be nearby when it reaches its conclusion.

Once the battle begins in earnest Demogorgon utilizes the following tactics.

Surprise Round: Demogorgon opens his gate and steps into area 13, delivers his telepathic monologue to the PCs. Gwynharwyf notices the gate open and assumes whirlwind form. Iggwily notices gate open and teleports to the entrance of Wat Dagon. Soothed by Demogorgon's presence, the fiendish oyster relaxes and opens its valves.

Round 1: If she beats Demogorgon's initiative, Gwynharwyf can move into area 13, whereupon she falls under PC control. On his turn Demogorgon ceases concentrating on the gate (causing it to close behind him), uses a quickened feeblermind on a spell-casting PC, and then uses the first of his actions to telekinesis the master pearl into Hethradrah's mouth (his right head) where it is promptly swallowed. He uses his second action to summon a balor (Demogorgon does not have to make the caster level check to use summon spells in Wat Dagon).

Round 2: Demogorgon attempts to telepathically contact Nalunga. If he isn't present, if he discovers that the now-dead shaman is waiting on the other side of the closed and locked door in area 12, Demogorgon can spend a standard action to open the door. Otherwise, he spends one of his actions to attack a full-round attack if possible, uses another action to use an area greater dispel magic on the PCs, and uses a second quickened feeblermind on a PC.

Round 3+: In the following rounds, Demogorgon generally takes one of his dual actions to make a full attack action, or to move and make a single attack, and uses another action to use a spell-like ability or to direct a gaze weapon at a specific PC. Whenever he's reduced below 300 hit points, he casts heal on himself. In the first few rounds of combat he's likely to focus the majority of his attacks on Gwynharwyf—she can likely take a few rounds of dedicated attacks from the Prince of Demons, but she won't last for long. But by distracting Demogorgon, she certainly gives the PCs the opportunity to get in a few rounds of actions. If the PCs retreat back through Wat Dagon, Demogorgon is too large to squeeze through five foot-wide doors and has to instead cast shapechange to temporarily assume a smaller form to pursue.

Iggwily reaches area 12 at the end of round 3. If the door to area 13 is closed and locked, she opens it with a timed wish (to duplicate a knock spell) but remains out of sight in the stream preparing an action in case Demogorgon tries to escape.

Unless the PCs manage to fully distract him and inflict the full 10 negative levels, Demogorgon retains the ability to create a gate. If things are looking grim and he's reduced to less than 100 hit points, the Prince of Demons casts gate to retreat to Abyss in an attempt to escape with the master pearl safe in his belly. Unfortunately for Demogorgon, by this point Iggwilf has reached the area and has prepared an action for just such an event. As he casts gate, the Witch Queen casts dimensional lock in the room, effectively blocking the gate and giving the PCs one more round to flail him off.

There's a small chance nevertheless that Demogorgon might manage to escape once things turn bad. If he can retreat to Abyss with the master pearl, he's effectively unreachable for now—penetrating Abyss's defenses is an adventure in and of itself. Demogorgon still lives, and the master pearl still exists, but this situation still isn't a total loss for the PCs (see Concluding the Adventure).

End of a Demon Prince

Although the PCs need not slay Demogorgon to prevent the savage tide (see Concluding the Adventure), killing the Prince of Demons is the most direct way to stop his plans. If Demogorgon is struck a mortal blow, a nimbus forms around his heads resembling two crowns of dark energy. These crowns quickly merge into one single crown, and as the towering demon lord crumbles to the ground, his dying roar echoes out from Wat Dagon and into both Gaping Maw and Shadowsea—a beacon to all who lust for power.

At this point, all creatures on Gaping Maw and Shadowsea are instantly aware of Demogorgon's fall and realize that the strange crownlike emanation is the right of mastery over the entire layer. Every being on the plane who aspires to the title of Prince of Demons realizes he may attempt to claim the title as his own.

To attempt to claim the title of Prince of Demons, a character need only make a level check modified by his Charisma modifier. The character who struck the killing blow on Demogorgon (not just one who reduced the demon lord to 0 or negative hit points) gains a +15 circumstance bonus on this check. Creatures with a blood relation to Demogorgon gain a +5 circumstance bonus on the check. Creatures (like Graz'zt) who did not participate in a meaningful way in the savage tide or the War of Gaping Maw suffer a -10 penalty. While many creatures on Gaping Maw and Shadowsea lust for the mantle of rulership, only a few are likely contenders and thus need be considered in this contest. These individuals and their modified checks are as follows: Arendagrost +33, Bagromar +41, Belcheresk +34, Dagon +38, Ghorvash +26, Graz'zt +42, Gromsted +36, Kargoch +31, Nuwong +28 (+26 as juju zombie), Orcus +43, Tetradarian +41, Ulu-Thurg +32, and Urbala +27.

Neither Celeste nor Gwynharwyf elect to try and take on such an onerous mantle, and Charon abstains as well (since the title would essentially amount to a "demotion" for him). Quath Nornag loyal as ever to Orcus abstains in deference to his lord. Although she's tempted Iggwilf also abstains, as she is happier with her current plans to utilize Demogorgon's "soul" for her own purposes—she more than any other mortal understands the perils associated with becoming a Princess of Demons.

Of course, any of the PCs are welcome to roll as well—and in fact, attempting to take the roll is only to keep such power from Orcus or the other fiends is an almost noble reason for sacrificing one's soul (which is essentially what taking on the mantle of Prince of Demons amounts to). Each contender rolls once, with ties being resolved by additional rolls. The winner becomes the new ruler of Gaping Maw, gaining control over its morphic characteristics and the tanarri subtype if he doesn't already have it. The new Prince of Demons's alignment immediately shifts to a chaotic or an evil alignment (prince's choice), and he is considered a native of the 88th layer of the Abyss. If a character is still serving as Malcanthet's proxy, she tries to force that PC to claim the crown, promising whatever she thinks it'll take in reward for essentially becoming her new lover. She resorts to casting demand on the player if it comes to it. If her agent fails to become the Prince of Demons for whatever reason, she tears her mark free from him, leaving an ugly red scar and inflicting 2d6 points of Charisma drain in the process. Malcanthet holds grudges—that PC has certainly not heard the last from her.

Stopping the Savage Tide

The surest way to stop the mass savage tide from ever occurring is to destroy the master pearl. Mordenkainen's disjunction has a chance of doing this, but such a route is risky. Once the PCs have control of the master pearl, they can retreat to a safe location (such as the Eadrin Court of Stars, or even Iggwilf's Manor) where Demogorgon won't be able to follow with ease. If Demogorgon survives, he'll certainly wage war against wherever the PCs go in an attempt to regain the master pearl, so the PCs don't have a lot of time to research a method for the artifact's destruction. Fortunately, with the master pearl at hand, the solution is only a DC 40 Knowledge (arcana) check and a day of study in a well-stocked library away—the surest and safest way to destroy it is to immerse the savage artifact in waters of exceptional serenity and purity. Half a dozen such locations exist in the multiverse, but the one that the PCs likely have the easiest access to is the fountain of beauty in the Court of Stars. The pearl, once immersed, crackles and smokes and seems ready to burst and trigger its savage tide anyway, then just as suddenly turns white and brittle, the consistency of chalk.

If the PCs don't have the allegiances with the Eadrins or otherwise don't have the resources to destroy the master pearl, secreting the artifact away is a temporary solution at best. Demogorgon spares no expense in tracking the pearl down, and eventually finds it, no matter how well hidden it is. Of course if this buys the PCs enough time to seek out and destroy all 34 shadow pearls hidden in the Material Plane, success is still theirs.

If Demogorgon is slain, the master pearl remains a threat. Anyone who learns the relatively simple ritual of activation can trigger it. The ritual of course must be performed in area 8 of Wat Dagon, so preventing access to this spot is a semi-effective way to stave off the savage tide. Of course, if the new Prince of Demons is allied with the PCs, he can use his ability to exert morphic control over Gaping Maw to shunt Wat Dagon into oblivion, although doing so makes a permanent and dangerous enemy of Dagon.

If Demogorgon survives and manages to escape Wat Dagon with the master pearl, the PCs have still bought themselves a little time. It will take Demogorgon several weeks of recuperating in his fortress of Abyss before he's able to return to Wat Dagon to trigger the savage tide. In that time, the PCs could go on a crusade in the Material Plane to scour the world of the 34 shadow pearls, could bargain with Dagon to seal off Wat Dagon from Gaping Maw, or could even organize a daring invasion of Abyss in an attempt to finish the job. Such adventures are, unfortunately, beyond the scope of this adventure (but see Continuing the Campaign below).

The worst case scenario sees the PCs failing to stop the savage tide, either because Demogorgon slew them all or because they were forced to flee the Abyss. In this case, Gwynharwyf is forced to abandon her assault soon thereafter—Orcus has already essentially quit the field. Charon, satisfied that Demogorgon has paid for his crimes against the Styx, returns to his traditional duties as well. Gaping Maw emerges from the war scarred but largely unchanged, and soon thereafter, the savage tide descends upon the world.

CONCLUDING THE ADVENTURE

If the PCs were successful in their quest, weighty matters have come to a head. Methods for destroying the master pearl are detailed above, yet there likely remains several loose ends that need tying up.

A Sacrifice to Ahazu: It's likely that the PCs were forced to make an unpleasant bargain with Ahazu the Seizer in return for the release of Shami-Amourae. If the PCs have already provided the Seizer with a replacement, then you can consider this loose end dealt with. If, on the other hand, they attempt to offer Demogorgon as the replacement, Iggywyl steps in to throw a kink into the plan (see below). In any event, Ahazu is not destined to gain Demogorgon as his latest prisoner. The PCs have what remains of their 66 days to find a replacement, otherwise they'll be drawn into the Wells of Darkness themselves. Of course, for epic level characters, there are always other options—see the Ahazu Ascendant campaign seed.

Demogorgon's Death: With Demogorgon's death, the defense of Gaping Maw falls apart as his hordes disperse in a panic, melting into the endless jungle and oceans. Orcus quickly claims Lembrax whether he's become the new Prince of Demons or not—if not, he maintains a reinforced beachhead that remains a thorn in the side of whomever rules in Demogorgon's stead. The eladrins conclude that their part in the invasion is done with Demogorgon's death and begin a systematic withdrawal, but not before Gwynharwyf and Celeste make sure that the PCs have a way out of the Abyss as well. The PCs have made eternal friends of the Court of Stars, but if one of them took the mantle of Prince of Demons, that one is forever viewed suspiciously as the eladrins wait to see if he, too, will succumb to demonic tendencies and need to be destroyed. Regardless, the great alliance that laid Demogorgon low quickly dissolves as each faction returns to its own interests.

Iggywyl's Plan: Iggywyl, now in possession of Tuerny's Iron Mask, makes herself known a few rounds after Demogorgon's defeat. If one of the PCs has become the new Prince of Demons, she smiles at him and invites him to drop by her manor, any time, for a long chat. She then unstoppers the flask and uses it to draw in the lingering motes of blackness and writhing smoke that coil around Demogorgon's corpse. As she draws in this essence, capturing what's left of Demogorgon's "soul," the dead demon lord's body melts away into the Abyss, leaving behind a permanent black stain on the shore. Iggywyl doesn't explain why she's gathering Demogorgon's soul, but it certainly prevents Ahazu from seizing him (see above), and if the PCs want to stop her, they'll need to fight her.

Once she's gathered all of Demogorgon's remains in the flask, she retreats to her manor—she has little interest in pursuing further interactions with the PCs at this time.

The Vanthus Situation: Vanthus, a thorn in the PCs' sides throughout the majority of the campaign, finds his final fate in the PCs' hands. Lavinia has little interest in redeeming him and indeed he may be beyond redemption, yet a PC who takes him under his wing may find that after all he's been through, Vanthus Vanderboren may yet have a sliver of honor left in what remains of his fractured soul.

CONTINUING THE CAMPAIGN

By the end of this adventure, the PCs should be at least 21st level, yet this does not mean that the adventure is over. Presented here are several adventure seeds that you can use to develop additional scenarios to challenge your now-epic-level PCs.

Ahazu Ascendant

If the PCs promised Ahazu a replacement prisoner for Shami-Amourae, they likely have only a few weeks remaining to find a proper sacrifice. Yet, as powerful as Ahazu is, he remains a prisoner himself, and the PCs are now powerful as well. If the characters decide to go back on their word and don't provide a replacement prisoner, the Wells of Darkness attempt to claim them instead, striking against the PCs 66 days after Shami-Amourae's release. Normally, nothing could prevent the PCs from being captured by the Abyss, but if Demogorgon has been defeated, they are the stuff of legend. Each PC gains a DC 30 Will save to resist being drawn into the Wells of Darkness, and since the Wells are attempting to capture all of them, all of the PCs must fail this save in order for them to become imprisoned. PCs on the Abyss at the time take a -10 penalty on this save, and those actually on the Wells of Darkness automatically fail their save.

If the Wells of Darkness fail to capture them, they do not try again. Yet the vacancy left by Shami-Amourae vexes and enrages Ahazu, and over the course of the next several months or years, the Seizer breaks free from his self-imposed prison in a fit of rage that releases all of the other prisoners of the Wells. The sudden return to the multiverse of so many powerful entities takes many pantheons by surprise, and the PCs may be called upon time and time again to deal with these escaped menaces. Eventually, Ahazu seeks the PCs out in an attempt to capture them himself—unless the PCs can defeat the CR 29 demon lord, they may be doomed.

New Thanacian

Iggwilv may have helped the PCs against the savage tide, yet she has never truly had their best interests at heart. In fact, one might view her actions as nothing more than a way to gather Demogorgon's essence in Ivern's Iron Flame.

Once she has this essence, Iggwilv sets her newest plot into motion, a plot to rebuild her empire on the Material Plane. The site for her plot, this time, is none other than the Isle of Dread. Using Demogorgon's essence, Iggwilv travels to the ruins of Thanacian, and in a single night of hideous power, resurrects the fallen city raising ruins from lake and erosion to build herself a new empire. She populates New Thanacian with demons, cambions, apprentices, and other monsters culled from the region, and soon begins to lay her plans to create a series of portals through which she hopes to extend her rule to several adjoining and unsuspecting regions to the north.

Of course, Farshore is among the first locations to learn of the strange new developments on the central plateau and if the PCs aren't already living there a panicked message from Lavina about strange lights atop the plateau and rumors of a reborn Thanacian should be more than enough to bring the PCs to investigate. Opposing Iggwilv is no small task, though, especially since the Witch Queen likely knows their weaknesses.

The Return of Obox-ob

Regardless of who carries the mantle of Prince of Demons (or even if Demogorgon survives), the events in Gaping Maw leave the Prince of Demons weak and shaken. Obox-ob, the Prince of Vermin, senses this weakness from the depths of Zyonyn, the 66ard layer of the Abyss, and while he doesn't immediately assault Gaping Maw, he certainly begins sending his armies of obyrith monstrosities (some of which have never before been seen by those beyond Zyonyn's uncharted reaches). These attacks grow quickly in power, and if Obox-ob manages to depose the Prince of Demons to reclaim his crown, the very nature of the Abyss changes. The tanar'ri, once feared and potent, are forced into hiding as the Abyss itself begins to disgorge new obyrith armies. While one might suppose that what's bad for the tanar'ri is good for the rest of the multiverse, the ascending obyrith plague does not remain in the Abyss. Horrors long dead begin spilling through portals and into the Astral Plane, plaguing dozens of sites throughout the multiverse. The eladrin and the elemental planes are hit hardest—the obyriths remember their loss so long ago and are ravenous for revenge. As one of the few who stood against a prince of demons and survived, powerful forces may turn to the PCs to aid them in stemming the obyrith tide and sending Obox-ob back into the depths of Zyonyn.

Rise of a Demon Prince

Demogorgon's nature was partially the result of the will of the Abyss, as manifested through Gaping Maw. Each month the new Prince of Demons rules the layer, he must make a DC 30 Will save to avoid succumbing to a form of madness that implants within him conflicting dual personalities that eventually result in the growth of a second head. Only beings who were already demon lords escape this fate.

In any event, a PC Prince of Demons finds that his new title may not be worth the trouble. Both Orcus and Graz'zt, assuming the new prince to be weak and untested, wage a relentless war against Gaping Maw. The new prince may have to seek alliances with other demon lords in order to keep his prize—Malcanthet is certainly a good start, but other demons like Dagon, Ilisidhuz, and Zugtzmoy who once maintained alliances with Demogorgon may (or may not) be interested in continuing such ties with the new prince. Of course, these allies likely require perilous and dangerous deeds by the new prince before they pledge their aid.

The Succubus War

With Shami-Amourae's release from the Wells of Darkness, Malcanthet's claim to the Razor Throne of Shendylavri begins to erode. Shami Amourae wastes no time in rebuilding her resources, and before long has not only forged an alliance with Lynkhab, but has delved into the Dreaming Gulf to rescue the succubus Ximivrae from the horrid fate Malcanthet visited upon her. Malcanthet defeated these contenders for her crown before, but now the three succubi are working together, and as their combined forces begin to whittle inexorably away at Malcanthet's armies and resources, the Queen of Succubi may just turn to the PCs she helped against Demogorgon. This time, though, it is she who needs the aid, and if the PCs refuse to help, she may just set into motion one of her typically complex plots to manipulate mortals into doing her bidding... starting with framing Shami-Amourae for all manner of horrendous crimes against the PCs in an attempt to trick them into opposing the Lady of Debased Eros.

Demogorgon Rising

Finally, there is the matter of Demogorgon himself. Even if the PCs manage the near-impossible and slay him on his home plane, the ex-Prince of Demons will not remain dead for long. Like Obox-ob and Orcus before him, it's only a matter of time before Demogorgon returns to the Abyss, whether grown from the shell of a surviving aspect, resurrected by a loyal and powerful minion, or even spontaneously reformed by the Abyss itself. And once his strength returns, it takes no huge stretch of the imagination to predict who taps his list for revenge.

APPENDIX ONE. NEW MAGIC ITEMS

Acid Launcher

Price (Item Level): 20,000 gp, 15th
Body Slot: — (siege weapon)
Caster Level: 10th

Aura: Moderate; (DC 20) evocation [acid]
Activation: See below
Weight: 1,400 lb.

This magical ballista does not use traditional ammunition. Instead it fires a sphere of acid (maximum range 800 feet) that explodes in a 20-foot radius spread. All creatures in the area take 10d6 points of acid damage, or half with a DC 15 Reflex save. An acid launcher requires no attack roll, takes up a 5-foot square, and requires a crew of three (or a single creature with six arms) to operate. Firing an acid launcher is a full-round action for all of its crew. The device, when created, has 50 charges—upon expending its final charge the acid launcher melts into a puddle of acid itself, inflicting 3d6 acid damage on its crew (Reflex DC 15 negates this damage).

Prerequisites: Craft Magic Arms and Armor, acid fog.

Blast Disk

Price (Item Level): 3,000 gp (7th)
Body Slot: —
Caster Level: 10th
Aura: Moderate; (DC 20) evocation (force)
Activation: Standard, manipulation
Weight: 1 lb.

A blast disk resembles a jet-black 8-inch diameter plate covered with tangled runes. When triggered, a blast disk explodes in a 10-foot-radius spread, dealing 3d6 points of force damage (Reflex DC 14 halves). The explosion completely consumes the disk, making this a one-use item.

A blast disk can be set to explode via proximity or a timer of up to five minutes—once the timer is set, you can deactivate it with a touch and a move-equivalent action. Others can deactivate it only with a DC 30 Use Magic Device check and a full-round action.

If the device is set to explode via proximity the blast disk arms 3 rounds after it is activated. Thereafter it explodes when the next small or larger creature enters the square in which it sits. That creature suffers a -2 penalty on the save to reduce damage inflicted by the blast disk.

Prerequisites: Craft Wondrous Item, magic missile.

Demogorgon's Bileous Sphere

Price (Item Level): Major Artifact
Body Slot: — (held)
Caster Level: 20th
Aura: Strong; (DC 25) abjuration, conjuration, enchantment, evocation
Activation: See below
Weight: 5 lb.

This twisted iron rod is topped by the Bileous Sphere, an obscene parody of the Orb of Sol. Any good creature that wields this major artifact gains one negative level that persists as long as the rod is held; this negative level never results in actual level loss and cannot be overcome in any way while the rod is held.

Demogorgon's Bileous Sphere has the following powers:

- It functions as a +5 heavy mace that deals an additional +1d6 points of acid damage on a hit. Five times a day as a free action, the wielder may increase the acid damage done on a single hit to +3d6.
- It can be used to cast stinking cloud five times per day.
- It can be used to cast acid fog three times per day.
- Three times per day it can create three spheres of acid. These spheres function as flame sphere, save that they glow green and inflict acid damage. All three spheres can be moved individually with a single move action.
- Once per day, it can be used to create a feeling of intense hatred in a creature within 60 feet. The target can resist this effect with a DC 23 Will save, otherwise it views another creature within sight (chosen by the rod's user) as its most hated enemy. The target must do everything in its power to slay its enemy. This effect persists until the enemy is dead or 24 hours pass; it may be dispelled as if it were dominate monster.
- A creature whom Demogorgon favors can, as a free action, gain the following benefits once per day: immunity to acid, 4d12 temporary hit points, a +6 enhancement bonus to Strength, or DR 15/cold iron and good.

Force Missile Ballista

Price (Item Level): 20,000 gp (15th)
Body Slot: — (siege weapon)
Caster Level: 0th
Aura: Moderate; (DC 20) evocation [force]
Activation: See below
Weight: 1,400 lb.

This ballista does not use traditional ammunition. Instead it fires a barrage of five magic missiles unerringly at any single target within 800 feet; each magic missile deals 1d4+1 points of force damage. After the missiles strike their initial target, an additional missile fires at every other creature within 30 feet of the primary target—each of these missiles strikes unerringly as well for 1d4+1 points of force damage.

A force missile ballista requires no attack roll, takes up a 5-foot square, and requires a crew of two (or a single creature with four arms) to operate. Firing a force missile ballista is a full-round action for all of its crew. The device, when created, has 50 charges—upon expending its final charge the force missile ballista bursts into a storm of missiles that inflicts 5d4+5 points of force damage on every creature within a 30-foot radius—demonic commanders often order their underlings to save the device's last charge until the enemy is right on top of them and then use the final charge as a last-ditch attack.

Skull of Kallum

Price (Item Level): Major Artifact
Body Slot: — (held)
Caster Level: 20th
Aura: Strong; (DC 25) necromancy
Activation: See below
Weight: 2 lb.

This is a human skull with a bronze strap riveted around it transversely to hold its jawbone in place. Battered and stained from long years, its four front teeth are missing and a rune written in Abyssal glows upon its forehead.

This skull once belonged to the adventurer Kallum Vanderboren, murdered by his own nephew Vanthus after he was seduced to evil by Ghorvash. Some time after Kallum's death, Ghorvash claimed the skull and, with Demogorgon's aid, caught the spirit of the betrayer in the skull.

The skull of Kallum is meant to be wielded as a light weapon. When a creature attacks with it, the skull's jaw bites and tears, inflicting 1d6 points of piercing, slashing, and bludgeoning damage. Although the skull provides no enhancement bonus to attack or damage rolls, it is treated as a magic evil weapon for the purposes of overcoming damage reduction.

The skull's true power lies in the betrayer's curse. Each time the skull inflicts damage, the victim must make a DC 22 Will save or become affected by this curse. This curse manifests in combat only—there's a 25% chance each round that the victim attempts to harm his closest ally with his most effective attack or spell rather than take his intended action. If no allies are within reach, he moves toward the closest visible target. If no allies are visible, the cursed victim spends his round roaring in anger and rage and can take no other action.

This curse is a mind-affecting compulsion. It can be removed by a miracle or wish, but remove curse is only effective if the caster succeeds at a TW 30 caster level check.

Totem of Negation

Price (Item Level): 200,000 gp (25th)

Body Slot: (held)

Caster Level: 20th

Aura: Strong (DC 25) abjuration, conjuration, enchantment, evocation

Activation: See below

Weight: 60 lb.

This is a hideous wooden pole decorated with leering demon faces. One end of the totem is sharpened to a point. Initially created by Craft for use in battles against regions of spellcasting enemies, the secret of creating these powerful totems has long since been sold to numerous demon lords, among them Demogorgon. Nonetheless, the fantastic cost of creating a totem of negation ensures that they are not often used on the battlefield.

A totem of negation is a one-use item that activates as soon as it is thrust into the ground. At this point, the totem creates a 60-foot radius spread of dead magic, a region in which no spell, spell-like ability, or supernatural ability can function. The dead magic zone persists as long as the totem remains in place. An active totem of negation remains anchored in place via an effect identical to that utilized by an immovable rod, except much more powerful. This effect is the only magical effect that can function inside of a dead magic zone created by a totem of negation. If a creature pushes against an active totem of negation, it must make a DC 30 Strength check to topple the totem—doing so causes the dead magic zone to end and leaves the totem of negation a mundane totem pole. A totem of negation can also be destroyed by damage, but it has Hardness 20 and 600 hit points. Regardless of how the totem is destroyed, the dead magic zone ceases to function immediately.

Prerequisites: Craft Wondrous Item, antimagic field.

APPENDIX TWO: NEW MONSTER

Arendagrost: Maw of the Abyss

It is huge, a corpulent thing of darkness and hate and madness. A trio of maws gape from vaguely fiendish heads, each gigantic rotting mouth filled with row upon row of fangs. An obscenity of anger the size of a house, its body is little more than a writhing tangle of tentacles, each large enough to crush the life out of a man with but a moment's idle whim.

Breath Weapons (Su) Each of Arendagrost's hideous maws possess a different breath weapon, each usable once every 1d4 rounds. The left head breathes a 50-foot cone of fire (20d6 fire, Reflex DC 36 half), the right a 50-foot cone of frost (20d6 cold, Reflex DC 36 half), and the center a 100-foot line of bloody acid (20d6 acid, Reflex DC 36 half). As a full-round action, Arendagrost can use all three breath weapons at the same time; otherwise, use of a single breath weapon is a standard action. The save DCs are Constitution-based.

Death Gaze (Su) Any living creature within 30 feet that meets Arendagrost's gaze must make a DC 27 Fortitude save or die instantly. The save DC is Charisma-based.

Arendagrost is the legendary offspring of Demogorgon, the Prince of Demons, and Malcanthet, Queen of the Succubi, the result of their first unholy tryst. For an age, Arendagrost was kept secretly shackled in the deepest bowels of Abyss, an abomination so heinous that not even the demon lord could stomach its twisted countenances. Arendagrost's first known appearance occurred almost 400 years ago when Lord Kargoth, first of the death knights, released Arendagrost from its prison as part of a profane ritual corrupting the power of the Orb of Sol. Arendagrost was unleashed upon the Great Kingdom outside Red Haven and cut a swath of destruction toward the capital of Ravens, laying waste to all in its path before finally being cut down by the combined might of the Knight Protectors of the Great Kingdom. Arendagrost's defeat banished it back to the Gaping Maw for 100 years, but it had proven its worth to its father.

Demogorgon saw that Arendagrost could be used to enforce his will if monitored carefully. The Prince of Demons created a lair for Arendagrost beneath the fortress of Ungorth Reddik, where it could serve to guard the land approach to his capital city of Lemnarak. Arendagrost also proved to be an expedient way to dispose of powerful prisoners that Demogorgon wished to eliminate. After Arendagrost's initial banishment had ended, Demogorgon began using it cautiously to wreak havoc and destruction on other layers of the Abyss and other planes. Legends tell of a small Material Plane world, now cold and dead, that incurred the Demogorgon's wrath. He sent Arendagrost to punish it for a century. In addition, both Orcus and Graz'zt have felt the heavy tread of the Maw of the Abyss in assaults upon their homes. In addition to its first death upon the Material Plane, Arendagrost has been slain twice in combat with Orcus, though always at the cost of many of the Prince of Undeath's most powerful servants, banishing it again to Gaping Maw. Arendagrost is once again nearing the end of its latest term of imprisonment, and Demogorgon is contemplating new strategies of deployment against powerful strongholds on the Material Plane rather than wasting its might in futile battles with other demon lords. In a few short years, the "Tarnished of the Great Wheel" will once again prey upon mortal worlds.

Arendagrost is a being of pure hate, and tends to crash into combat in almost mindless savagery, reveling in the destruction it causes. Characters slain or incapacitated by the creature are devoured as soon as possible. The destruction caused by its draconic heads is of particular amusement to the creature, and it attacks with its breath weapons as often as possible, delighting in turning its fire onto characters that appear to be near death, waiting for them to beg for mercy or quiver in terror before obliterating them. Arendagrost only withdraws from combat at Demogorgon's direct order.

Demogorgon and Malcanthet produced many other hideous offspring, but none as horrific and powerful as the Maw of the Abyss. As an outsider, Arendagrost breathes but does not need to eat or sleep. It does not appear that Arendagrost can produce its own offspring, but since it attempts to destroy any other being it encounters, this theory is unlikely to be tested. Arendagrost can only be permanently killed on the Gaping Maw, its home layer of the Abyss.

As always, Greg thanks those who contributed to the creation of this adventure, including his playtesters, James and the guys at DUNGEON and, of course, all the writers of the Savage Tide Adventure Path for their inspiration and assistance. He'd like to dedicate "Prince of Demons" to his son, born during its writing. (Just don't tell his wife—she might take it the wrong way.) Greg also thanks Richard Pett for his aid in creating Arendagrost, the Maw of the Abyss.

1. The first step is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the current situation and the goals that need to be achieved.

2. Next, it is important to gather information. This can be done through research, interviews, and data analysis.

3. Once the information is gathered, the next step is to develop a plan. This plan should outline the steps that need to be taken to solve the problem.

4. After the plan is developed, it is time to implement it. This involves putting the plan into action and monitoring progress.

5. Finally, it is important to evaluate the results. This involves assessing whether the problem has been solved and whether the goals have been achieved.

10: KYUSS

Debut: "Dawn of a New Age," by Tito West (DUNGEON #115)

8: THE KADTANACH

Debut: "Beast of Burden," by Michael Kortez (DUNGEON #100)

Claim to Fame: From the grand word for "too massive to see at a glance," the Kadtanach is a mobile fortress built atop the back of a colossal, magical beast. Shockingly, it only has six hit points.

8: AZURAX SILVERHAWK

Debut: "Threshold of Evil," by Scott Bennie (DUNGEON #10)

Claim to Fame: For years this adventure reigned as our highest-level dungeon. As its big-bad-end-guy it featured Azurax, DUNGEON's resident immortal, simulacrum-fueled, wish-happy IPK machine.

7: SCUTTLECOVE

Debut. Porphyry House Horror," by James Jacobs (DUNGEON #95)
Claim to Fame. A wretched pit of the worst villains D&D has to offer, Scuttle Cove was designed specifically to support the Book of Vile Darkness, and included cannibals, drug abuse, prostitution, demon worship, and worse. We had to sea the pages up as a result

7: VHALANTRU

Debut. "Lords of Oblivion" by Christopher Perkins (DUNGEON #111)
Claim to Fame. Although DUNGEON's most famous beholder first appeared in issue #97 at the start of the Shackled City Adventure Path, it wasn't really fair to make the PCs fight him until 14 issues later.

6: SASSERINE

Debut: "Zenith Trajectory," by David Noonan (DUNGEON #139)

Claim to Fame: D&D's version of Casablanca and Venice, Sasserine's got it all for those seeking urban adventure. Assistant editor Jeremy Waskers' main concern, though, is that all those canals would make the city stink.

Villain

6: MALCANTHET

Debut: "Maure Castle," by Robert J. Kuntz (DUNGEON #112)

Claim to Fame: Malcanthet was first mentioned as the patron of rebellious Eluvia Maure. Since then, she's gone on to become one of the most popular demon lords in the game. Hmmm... I wonder why that is?

5: MUD SORCERER'S TOMB

Debut: "The Mud Sorcerer's Tomb," by Mike Shel (DUNGEON #37).
Claim to Fame: With its thematic similarities to the classic "Tomb of Horrors" and the creativity of its elemental-themed traps and guardians, this adventure was recently adapted to 3rd edition in DUNGEON #138.

Villain

5: VANTHUS VANDERBORN

Debut: "There Is No Honor" by James Jacobs (DUNGEON #139).
Claim to Fame: Locking the PCs into a damp dungeon infested with zombie pirates is a pretty good way to steer the players into having a recurring villain destined to plague them across an entire Adventure Path.

4: DIAMOND LAKE

Debut "The Whispering Cairn," by Erik Mona
DUNGEON #124

Claim to Fame Swarms of acid beetles, necromancers armed with syringes, a town full of corruption, and a nearby dungeon designed by the same folk who built the Rod of Seven Parts. What's not to love?

Villain

4: BALABAR SMEFNIK

First Appearance "The Whispering Cairn" by Erik Mona
DUNGEON #124

Claim to Fame Those of you who haven't heard Erik Mona's "Balabar Smefnik" voice don't know what you're missing. If you had, he probably would have been villain #1. Balabar that is. Not Erik. He's only #11.

3: MAURE CASTLE

Source: "Maure Castle," by Robert J. Kuntz, DUNGEON #112

Claim to Fame: Filing an issue with only one adventure risky when cries of "there aren't enough adventures in each issue" were a common complaint, yet Maure Castle went on to spawn two sequels and two of DUNGEON's most beloved (hated) villains.

3: ELI TOMORAST

Debut: "Maure Castle," by Robert J. Kuntz, DUNGEON #112

Claim to Fame: Like Maure Castle, Eli's true debut was in WG's "Mordanka non's Fantastic Adventure." He's gained a few levels since then, but the demon hands remained more or less the same. Plus, Kerzit works for him. Not a bad gig.

DESIGNING MYSTERIES THAT LAST

BY WOLFGANG BALR
BY KYLE HUNTER

D&D has a long tradition of mystery adventures from hidden cultists with complicated schemes to summon elder elemental gods right down to basic murder mysteries going back to "Assassin's Knot." But it's not easy to sustain a mystery in a magic universe. As a DM or adventure designer, how do you keep a mystery going in a game that includes divination spells like discern lie and class abilities such as the paladin's detect evil?

On the one hand, you could simply save mystery adventures for low levels—but what's the fun in that? Presented here are some options for Dungeon Masters to use when creating or running their own mystery adventures at any level.

The First Clue

The way the players first encounter the mystery often colors their perceptions of the entire adventure, so choose that first scene carefully. It will send the party down false trails if you sprinkle the right clues in the description, but it will also provide easy answers if your players have the right skills, so play to at least one of their weaknesses.

The exact clues aren't the most crucial element. The goal is to provide fragments that motivate the party to follow up and take heroic action. But the clues also have to point the players in at least two directions, one being a thread that you have carefully laid down to go through a maze or breadcrumb trail to the solution.

while the other is a false clue that may be initially much more appealing.

False Trails and Questions of Motive

As the DM, you are the information bottleneck for any mystery: if the answer to the mystery doesn't pass your lips, the players will never solve it. So imagine the chaos that false information creates. Players are generally predisposed to believe what you tell them, in most adventures, you're providing factual information about setting details, NPC actions, rules, or sensory information.

It's amazing how far deception can lead an investigation astray, but in a mystery villains have every reason to lie. Try to be convincing. If you make it obvious that an NPC is being shafty, your players will spot it right away. I recommend not being obvious at all. You might fear the game won't be fun if the party is frustrated, but giving away easy clues takes away the fun of, "Is the DM telling us the truth?"

Which brings me around to the Sense Motive check, the third-edition twist to the classic mystery.

Any serious player solving mysteries needs some ranks in Sense Motive. By implication, this suggests that the bard, monk, paladin, rogue, and the NPC aristocrat classes are likely the best detectives. The skill description says that a character can get a hunch "that something is wrong," but Sense Motive is not a lie detector. When players want to know if someone is being evasive, bluffing, or untrustworthy, ask for a Sense Motive check. It makes for a good follow-up to Gather Information or Intimidate checks, especially if a character is quizzing a shafty source and has doubts about the quality of the information he's getting.

False trails might be found by high Sense Motive rolls, but they require further evidence to disprove—no sheriff or catchpole will accept a hunch as evidence. If a suspect claims the stains on his floor were from spilled wine, and the party later learns he only drinks beer, they may decide that he is unreliable. It might not prove guilt, but if he's lying to the party, he's hiding something.

Always think up one or more excuses for why evidence that implicates a villain might mean something else. If he keeps bloodstained knives around the house, he may be a butcher or tanner by trade. If the neighbors hear strange screams from his barn, he may keep roosters or peacocks as pets. You get the idea.

Expanding Hints and Burying Threads

Investigative parties try every lead, cast magic, and even use checklists to learn more information. You have to make a choice between playing it out in character, using social skill checks, or some combination. I recommend the mixed option.

In the investigative phase, you want to take the mystery's central thread, the actions of the major villain, and muddy the waters. This means either complicating things with more suspects or burying the villain's crime in a flood of useless additional information. For instance, the villain's ally may act badly and come under suspicion, an innocent person may walk into the wrong place and say something damning, or a witness may swear he saw a person with a superficial resemblance to the villain commit the crime. One villain and three viable suspects is usually enough for a short mystery. For a larger location-based mystery (unraveling a complex smuggling operation), you can still mix up possibilities, which might be entire gangs or outfits rather than single suspects.

Changing the party's initial assumptions is a great way to keep a mystery going. For example, the identity of the victim, the location of the crime, or (most often) the perceived motive may change. To set this up, determine the true identity/location/motive first, then figure out a likely (but mistaken) interpretation of the facts. Make sure that the false interpretation seems obvious based on the initial clues. Presto, you have reverse-engineered a plot twist.

Gather Information: This skill is useful for planting hints, rumors, and back-ground on various suspects, but players don't get much satisfaction if the heart of the mystery is solved by a Gather Information check. Rather, use this skill to provide the party with lists of leads. Then make them work to find and question suspects or recover objects. Alternately, create a table for the skill with degrees of success. Using this option, the very best clues require higher skill checks.

Library Use/Research: Call of Cthulhu players already know this skill, which does not exist in standard D&D. It's one of the key skills in Call of Cthulhu because it's all about following paper trails. In a D&D setting, the number of records and documents is smaller, but if you are planning a mystery one-shot or a short ad mystery campaign, I recommend you make this skill available to the players during character generation.

Deep Darks

If you're going to have a mystery that's not just a murder, plant a well-hidden secret. You'll need the secret information, a group that knows the secret, and an ongoing agenda for the secret (that is, what the villain plans to do with it). The secret itself should be something dangerous, bizarre, shameful, or powerful such as:

- A new spell that binds souls to the caster
- A secret family alliance with shadowy Fey
- A corrupt way of creating magical items
- Mercenaries hidden nearby to help stage a coup

I'm sure you can think of secrets that work for your campaign. The information has to be dangerous to the status quo, to particular people, or to everyone. Otherwise, why keep it secret?

But of course, secrets are hard to keep, and "three can keep a secret if two of them are dead." You need someone who knows the secret: a witness, a cult member having second thoughts—someone who talks. Which brings us to witnesses and clues.

Crucial Clues or Witnesses

Most mysteries seem a lot harder when you didn't design them. Players are operating in an information vacuum. Interweaving a relatively small number of elements can create a good-sized mystery.

A short adventure might have very few real clues: two useful crucial clues, say, and one hint and one false trail. More than that and it becomes difficult to manage, and worse still, the mystery may be abandoned by players eager to get on with the hacking and the looting (your players may vary, of course). Sometimes an entire mystery is just a prelude to an extended combat sequence or to a complete reversal of expectations ("Our patron is a werewolf?"). For those, I'd suggest plenty of action scenes and relatively little emphasis on investigation; it's more a surprise than a mystery.

What do I mean by a crucial clue? It could be the murder weapon's location (if the party can cast locate object, they could learn something about where the killer chose to hide a blade). It could be a list of spell ingredients that points to a plan for summoning. It could be a witness afraid of what the priests will do to him if they learn he was in the graveyard the night the necromancer came to town. A crucial clue turns the gaze of suspicion to a new target or makes the innocence of a previous suspect clear.

Objects as witnesses: All items in a medieval setting are unique; the only mass-produced items are pottery and coins, maybe chain links and nails. This means that clothes, jewelry, weapons, or the like can be traced to an owner. Books can also be useful "witnesses," spilling secrets that are otherwise inaccessible (such as actions in the past, the half-monstrous bloodline of a hundred years ago, or a mention of the hidden stairs that lead to the cult shrine).

Alibis: A perfect alibi is a fine story-shifting clue. A character who claims she saw the chief suspect elsewhere at the time of the crime is a great wrinkle in what the PCs think they know. Even better, an alibi allows a second shift later, when it becomes clear that the witness was charmed into telling this story.

Witnesses: To my way of designing, object clues are fine and useful, but usually too straightforward. Witnesses and alibis are great clues because people have many reasons to misremember what they saw: fear of reprisal, loyalty to a spouse, confusion due to ignorance, or shame over their silence at the scene of the crime. They can be naïve, honestly mistaken, blackmailed, near-sighted, or just zealous hypocrites out to settle a score. And witnesses are much more fun to roleplay than a horseshoe or an az.

Divination Spells and Countermeasures

A PC with the right spell can always derail a mystery. How should you plan for detect lie, speaking with dead, or true seeing? Well, sometimes they should work, frankly. But when these spells fail and the PC doesn't know it, you have another type of false trail.

Detect thoughts: Surface thoughts can give away a lot. Make sure your villain has a high Will save or has quite alien thoughts (in another language, or simply inhuman). If the party uses this spell carefully, they should get evidence from it.

You may not need to work against this spell, because while they may learn something, it's hard to prove anything against a trusted or powerful suspect. If the mayor is guilty and the adventurers say they read his thoughts, well, that certainly makes people wonder. But if the beloved local mayor claims that the adventurers extorted him for a bribe and he refused, some townsfolk will suspect the adventurers are dirty rats trying to smear an innocent man.

Misdirection: This spell is your best friend if the party is a little too quick to accuse every evil creature they meet, and is available as a potion for non-caster villains. If players complain, well, they use magic all the time, what makes them think villains won't as well? Any villain caught in public without one isn't trying very hard.

Speak with dead: If you can quizz the murder victim, there's no mystery. But you can build a mystery to avoid this. If the local priests commonly use speaking with dead, then the local criminals will likely know that, just as modern criminals know about DNA and fingerprints, and some take countermeasures. The spell requires an identifiable, intact corpse, so criminals might smash a jawbone or cut vocal chords to prevent speech. Easier still, a criminal could take the whole skull or disintegrate. A series of decapitated murder victims is both creepy and logical for a mass murderer who fears magical discovery.

Furthermore, the spell works only if the corpse knew something important, such as his killer's name or motive. If the victim was shot from a distance, poisoned, or killed by a charmed monster, the mystery isn't solved yet, just pushed to the next link in the chain of clues.

True seeing: If your villain is a shapeshifter, a creature using illusions, or wearing a hat of disguise, this spell is your worst enemy. A PC using true seeing sees that the "mayor" is really a demon, or the "archmage" is an apprentice with a hat of disguise. Mystery solved. Many mystery scenarios of the mistaken-identity type just don't work at high levels for this reason.

But this spell can also sow confusion. Some creatures may hide their true shapes for good reasons (a Lawful Good drow might not want to show himself among an elven court), and others might be innocent. For instance, a ghoul might be passing as an elf, but true seeing reveals a glowing green light form. This spell can cast false trails in a helpful way: take advantage of the natural suspicion that players have for anything that is not as it appears.

Conclusion

Mysteries are a bit trickier to design than standard adventures, but only a bit. You need a small stable of clues and witnesses, including witnesses who saw nothing useful. I recommend running a few small mysteries before attempting a multi-session mystery arc.

As you grow more confident maintaining elaborate mysteries, you'll find some players respond to them more than others. Your players may want just a few mysteries as a change of pace; be careful about overwhelming them with too many clues or too many surprise endings. ad

BAR FIGHT!

BY JAMES LAFOND SUTTER

BY KYLE HUNTER

Sooner or later every adventuring party winds up at a tavern. Whether it's a meeting place for PCs or a well-earned break between adventures, there's nothing quite like the unusual and interesting people you meet in the village pub. And since this is D&D, what's the point of meeting interesting people if you don't get to fight them? Presented below are tense situations that can easily escalate into fights, along with stats for sample brawlers. In short, everything you need to craft a barroom bintz on the fly.

The Scenarios

Who's Your Daddy?: Two large men stand over a crying woman holding a baby, arguing fiercely over which man is the child's real father. Suddenly one of the men swings at the other and misses, knocking the woman out cold. The rest of the brawlers leap to their feet, and in the ensuing ruckus, it's up to the PCs to recover the baby and keep it safe.

Damn Your Eye! A furious farmer slaps another across the face, and to his horror the victim's glass eye pops out and skitters across the floor. The one-eyed man yells, "Grab that eye!" before leaping on top of his opponent, slamming into a full table and rousing the other drinkers. PCs attempting to recover the eye must succeed on a DC 15 Dexterity check.

Wedding Crashers: The inn is hosting a small wedding ceremony when the doors suddenly burst open and the bride's family comes crashing in, demanding that the "no-good gold-digging he-wench" unhand their daughter. In the fight that follows, both sides assume the PCs are with the rival guests. Correcting the misconception requires a DC 20 Diplomacy check, and settling the dispute a DC 30 check.

Drunk as a Lord: An intoxicated lordling seats himself at the PCs' table and awarcs them the "honor" of buying his drinks for the evening. With each cup he becomes more demeaning, pinching female PCs and holding forth on "the problems with common folk," taking offense at any perceived slight. His two beery guards look embarrassed, but once the lord takes a swing at the characters, they sigh and wade into battle. If the PCs fend off the lord's wild blows without doing any permanent damage, they can avoid incurring the wrath of the city guard.

Race Riot: A drunken dwarf topples off of the tall barstool provided for him, drawing laughs from a group of elves. The dwarf leaps up and upends their table and in the brawl that follows any elves or dwarves in the party find themselves singled out for vengeance.

Fire: A man slings an accused horse thief over the bar, smashing several bottles of the tavern's finest as well as one of the lamps, which ignites the flammable liquor. Unless quenched by a party member, fire spreads at a rate of one five-foot square per round, eventually consuming the entire building.

Mistaken Identity: The party is drinking quietly when four young men carrying chains and axe-handles burst through the door. The apparent ringleader points at the most inconspicuous male PC and yells, "There he is! Him's the one that done got Marlee with child!"

Political Debate: Two makeshift podiums stand to one side of the common room, from which two local mayoral candidates rail at each other before a sharply divided constituency. Suddenly a gobblet of spit flies between the groups of supporters, and the room erupts with violence. In addition to being swept up in the commotion, PCs making a DC 15 Spot check notice one of the "farmers" stealing voices from a ballot box and stuffing them into his jacket.

Gambling Problem: The PCs are drawn into a "friendly" game of dice with some locals. At some point when the PCs are doing well, one of the players "spots" a pair of weighted dice (actually palmed by the accuser) in one of the player's sleeves. The rest of the bar patrons leap to their feet in a righteous attempt to strip the "cheaters" of their goods.

Diversion: Two loud drunkards cast ever-greater curses and aspersions on each other over whose turn it is to pay the bill finally falling into a raucous wrestling match that slams into the PCs' table, likely resulting in one of the men taking a misguided swing at a PC. When the bartender emerges from behind the counter to break it up, PCs can make a DC 15 Spot check to notice a third man (secretly the drunkards' accomplice, stealing money from the inattentend till).

Bored Enchanter: In the far corner of the inn, a man wearing luxurious purple robes sits sullenly in the corner, surrounded by empty tankards and drawing impatiently on the table with a wine-damp fingertip. Without warning, two peasants from different tables leap to their feet and begin madly proclaiming their love for each other, much to the consternation of their previous companions. The man leans back and watches with a grin as the altercation becomes a full-blown fistfight. PCs making a DC 15 Spot check notice his lips moving slightly, and successful Spellcraft checks reveal that the man (male human sorcerer 4) is stirring up trouble via message and charm person.

The Bartender

Behind the bar stands a lumbering red-haired man in a leather apron. Despite his easy grin, muscles ripple beneath his beer-stained shirt, and a massive warhammer hangs within easy reach above the bar to handle any complaints about the service.

Hitting With The Bottle

No bar fight would be complete without at least one person getting a bottle broken over his head. In your next roadhouse dustup, consider allowing your players to use bottles of wine or ale as improvised melee or thrown weapons (with a -4 penalty on attack rolls). A standard bottle has the same stats as a dagger with the exception that the first successful hit does non-lethal bludgeoning damage and shatters the bottle. From this point on, the bottle uses standard dagger statistics, as its jagged edges are perfect for slicing throats.

THE GODTRAP

BY F. WESLEY SCHNEIDER

BY KYLE HUNTER

In 421 CY Zagig Yragerne, Lord Mayor of the Free City of Greyhawk, utilized the opposing deity powers of nine ensnared divinities to catalyze a daring apotheosis. As brazen and miraculous as Zagig's ascendance to godhood was, his method of transcending, a marvel of arcana that's come to be known to some as the Godtrap, was only slightly less phenomenal.

A creation of equal parts genius and madness, the original Godtrap lies deep within the ruins of Castle Greyhawk in the dangerous laboratories that once served as Zagig's personal sanctum. Utilizing the power of nine deities, each of a different alignment, the Godtrap possesses the potential to catapult a single mortal beyond his terrestrial bonds into godhood. Since Zagig's phenomenal success, many would-be godlings have attempted to duplicate the Mad Archmage's work. While several deluded archmages, power-mad tyrants, and desperate liches have attempted to recreate the apparatus, none have replicated Zagig's success (and many have met varied and terrible ends). Along the way, their creativity has produced countless lesser godtraps, some little more than cages for powerful extraplanar beings, some deadly arcane bombs, and some—a rare few—potential gates to divinity.

Zagig's Godtrap

The original Godtrap created by Zagig still exists in the aging, monster-stalked level of Castle Greyhawk now known as Zagig's Prison. Most of its occupants long since escaped or evicted, great potential still lingers within the apparatus, and many daring mages have attempted to reach Greyhawk's deadly lower levels to study the spells woven here. Zagig's Godtrap has most recently been detailed in Expedition to the Ruins of Castle Greyhawk and plays a crucial role in that adventure's plot.

Lesser Godtraps

A less ambitious form of Zagig's creation, lesser godtraps serve as tentative first steps for those planning to build a complete godtrap, or possibly for those whose ambitions are slightly less insane.

Appearance: A lesser godtrap consists of a large chamber containing three concentric rings, each ring an arcane cage crossed with a myriad of arcane markings and interwoven spells (both visible and invisible). The cages themselves might take a variety of forms: elaborate mirrors, man-sized crystals, multicolored giant skulls, detailed paintings of their occupants, or other sizable and ostentatious displays. In the center of the room that holds the apparatus (usually a circular room at least 40 feet in diameter) is a focal point where a spellcaster can manipulate the lesser godtrap's energies. This focal point also might take a variety of forms, such as a low pillar etched with runes, a floating orb, or simply a low dais.

A lesser godtrap has three different functions: capture, release, and transformation. All of these operations are manipulated using the room's focal point.

Capture: Lesser godtraps function by corrupting the terms of the "calling creatures" aspect of gate. The caster must convince an outsider to serve him for a period of 1 year and provide the creature with immediate payment for that term of service (as described in the spell). If the creature knows that the caster seeks to capture it within a lesser godtrap, it is unlikely to agree to any price. Once a being commits to the service and is paid, the lesser godtrap attempt to draw the outsider into one of the device's empty cages. The creature receives a Will save equal to 10 + the caster's caster level + the caster's Charisma modifier. If the creature fails, it is drawn into the lesser godtrap and may be used to fuel the apparatus's transformation ability. If it succeeds, it is released from both the lesser godtrap and the terms of the gate spell with full knowledge of what the caster attempted to do. Only outsiders or elementals can be captured by a lesser godtrap. Other creature types are unaffected.

Release: By touching the room's focal point and concentrating on a filled cage, a lesser godtrap releases a creature it has captured. This operation is especially delicate. If after a round of contact the user has not focused his mind upon a specific cage, the lesser godtrap releases all the beings currently held within. These creatures are not controlled by the user and may act as they please.

Transform: This is the ultimate ability of a lesser godtrap, by which a user imbues himself with the powers of the trapped creatures and becomes another being entirely. This function can only be used when each of the lesser godtrap's three cages are filled by creatures involved in one of the transformation formulas below (if the captured creatures meet none of the formulas, a Misuse occurs). Upon touching the room's focal point and casting the spell energy drain (or having another cast it for him), the user begins an hour-long transformation.

The user can perform no action for the next hour, not even speech. Taking an action, being forced away from the room's focus, or any other interruption has devastating effects (see Misuse). In addition, the total Hit Dice of the creatures held within the lesser godtrap must be at least triple the user's Hit Dice. At the end of the hour-long process, if the siphoned creature's total Hit Dice do not equal or exceed three-times the user's, the transformation process has no effect (but the lesser godtrap is not damaged).

Should all the prerequisites of imprisoned creatures, Hit Dice, and time be met, the user is transformed, permanently gaining the benefit of one of the templates below. Other forms of transformation might exist but the methods for such processes are currently unknown.

Misuse: Despite being wonders of arcane creation, lesser godtraps are exceedingly fragile. Should the device be used incorrectly or any of its parts take 10 points of damage or more (most components of a lesser godtrap have hardness 8), the device erupts in a conflagration of magical energy. This eruption deals 20d6 points of force damage. Due to the unleashed conjuration magic, for each creature in the room there is a 20% chance of being sent to a random plane. In addition, any creatures imprisoned in the device's cages are released. After such an explosion, the lesser godtrap is destroyed. ☞

FIEND-SAGE

BY SEAN K. REYNOLDS

BY JILLIE DILLON

Very little is known about the Fiend-Sage's history. For some time it has been an associate of Drax the Invulnerable, the undead lord of the city of Rel Astra, with Drax providing the Fiend-Sage a place to research and the demon providing the man with information and advice. While a molydeus normally works as an enforcer for a powerful demon lord, the Fiend-Sage has no known master, and pursues its own agenda within the framework of advising the Lord of Rel Astra.

The Fiend-Sage collects rare books, strange beasts, unusual magic items, and lost spells. Its knowledge in these fields is incredible, and it usually knows a way to mitigate an item's harmful effects on its demonic flesh. For example, when the artifact called the Crook of Rao banished most of the demons and devils from Qerth, the Fiend-Sage was unaffected, possibly because it had time to study the item while it was in Drax's possession. In addition to its general knowledge of hundreds of different magic items, the demon uses tracking magic to snoop on persons and items of interest.

The Fiend-Sage is the head of a small but far-reaching network of spies, agents, slaves, and allies. It does not employ fools, and quickly punishes minions for their failures, sometimes preemptively interrogating or torturing its own agents to ensure they haven't turned on it. Some of its employees are skilled rogues or mages, capable of infiltrating enemy lairs, defeating exotic creatures without leaving a mark, and preserving corpses for transport and dissection. Its direct agents are slavishly loyal to it, as they are paid well and frequently have their commitment tested, and many are tainted with fiendish blood, often as a reward for excellent service. Some of its minions, including a few adventuring groups, do its bidding through intermediaries, never knowing their pay ultimately comes from a demon.

Appearance

The Fiend-Sage stands 12 feet tall and wields a massive staff sporting glowing axe-blades and a guttering red ruby at the base of its shaft. Its crimson body bears clawed hands and the head of a ...eering, demonic hyena with silver eyes and great slavering fangs. A writhing snake protrudes from the side of the demon's neck, this second head coiling and hissing menacingly. Black robes covered in violet flames cover its body, and its cloak is made of human skin. Despite its fierce appearance and obviously evil nature, the demon calmly scrutinizes everything nearby, evaluating its value and utility.

Development

While typically demonic in its physical appetites, the Fiend-Sage is a genius-level intellect and doesn't engage in activities that would endanger its alliance with Drax Immortal. Patient and cunning, it is willing to set small things in motion now in order to reap greater rewards decades or centuries in the future, and has no problem waiting to outlive dangerous mortal opponents in order to claim a valuable item or piece of information. It is secure in its power, and acts subdued and humble (though not fawning) when it and Drax walk through the palace or city.

The Fiend-Sage is a loner and avoids other molydeus unless absolutely necessary. Because of its extensive contacts, it may be found all across the planes in the court of a demon lord or conferring with an elemental prince. Its hunger for knowledge and desire to examine rare magic frequently puts it in conflict with other greedy outsiders. Though in most cases this rivalry is cool hatred rather than open war, the Fiend-Sage may have a secret fortress somewhere in the Abyss, but if so its location is unknown.

Poison (Su) Injury, Fortitude DC 29, not a and secondary damage 2d6 Con. A creature killed by this poison immediately transforms into a manes demon (Fiendish Codex 1 45). Only a miracle or wish can reverse this transformation. Molydeus venom can harm creatures normally immune to poison. This excludes constructs, plants, or undead—against such creatures its effects are reduced to 1d6 points of Constitution damage.

Snakebite (Ex) The Fiend-Sage's snake head can strike independently of the demon's other actions. It can make a bite attack as a free action once per round while the molydeus takes any other standard or full-round action. The snake head always strikes as a secondary attack.

Spells The Fiend-Sage can prepare and cast arcane spells as a wizard, though the number of spells it can cast per day is limited (one spell slot for spells levels 0 through 6, plus bonus spells from its high intelligence). Between its own archives and that of its employer Drax, it has access to any common spells of these levels and many rare or obscure ones. The Fiend-Sage can use magic items as if it were an 11th-level wizard.

Summon Tanar'ri (Su) Once per day the Fiend-Sage can automatically summon d6 babaus, 1d4 chasmes, or one marilith. This ability is the equivalent of a 9th-level spell.

DERGHOLOTH

BY TODD STEWART

BY JULIE DILLON

Standing nearly ten feet tall atop an awkward tripod of legs and covered in a mottled gray-green hide, this fiend's thickly muscled torso is ringed by arms that brandish a motley assortment of weapons or claw the air malevolently. Sensing something, it slows, and without turning swivels its head a full three hundred and sixty degrees, revealing a face that is at once both repulsive and mantislike, faceted eyes burning like coals while its mandibles chatter incoherently.

One of the most common varieties of yugoloth, dergholoths are brutish, dim-witted creatures who serve as rank and file soldiers in the Blood War. Only one step above mezzoloths in the yugoloth hierarchy, but above the canoloth and skeroloth punishment castes, dergholoths are subjected to constant abuse by their commanders. Sadistic beings, they understand little beyond an urge to inflict pain and death, and turn the abuse they suffer on the mezzoloths they frequently command.

Dergholoths are rarely dispatched to the Material Plane or even seen beyond the lower planes, and in fact it is only outside of those planes that they can be permanently killed. Following a typical Blood War battle, dergholoths reform within 1d3 days, a trait unique among lesser yugoloths, likely an adaptation to allow loth armies to quickly recover their losses.

When not fighting, these fiends wander aimlessly, seeking lesser beings on which to take out their aggression. Due to the dergholoths' penchant for devouring larvae, the night hags of the Gray Waste regard them as a nuisance but tend to accept a certain level of theft, fearing conflict with the yugoloth race as a whole. Beyond gorging themselves on nascent petitioners, dergholoths often congregate in larger groups, following a programmed racial instinct that spares higher-caste yugoloths the need to gather them before sending them off to the Blood War like so much chattering cattle.

Dergholoths can speak crudely in Abyssal, Draconic, and Infernal, but prefer to rely on their telepathy.

Strategy and Tactics

Dergholoths are not subtle creatures, and against smaller foes they prefer to simply wade into melee, getting in close to use their claws or any weapons they might have scavenged on the battlefield, grappling if possible. Being surrounded poses little problem given their number of arms and all-around vision, but when pressed they may resort to using their chatter ability. That said, any dergho- loth given control of mezzoloths presses them abusively into combat first rather than risking itself, and only if its subordi- nates seem overwhelmed will it then enter the fight.

Ecology

Dergholoths are the second stage in a yugoloth's spiritual evolution. They form when a mezzoloth realizes that the derg- holoths who command them, though of higher caste, are actually weaker than they are in many ways. Raw strength alone does not correlate to authority, and this is the first lesson learned in a yugo- loth's progress up the chain of purifica- tion toward the more twisted, complex evil that their race personifies.

The transition is not spontaneous except in incredibly rare cases, and involves a pisco-oth-administered trial to ensure fitness and purity. Whatever the test entails, ultimately the mezzo- loth passes or is butchered; its remains ground to dust. The mezzoloth who succeeds to become a dergho-oth fares little better and is transformed by a pro- cess that involves a ritualistic drowning in the Styx.

Treasure

Brutish creatures with little comprehension of magic or appreciation for material wealth, dergholoths seldom carry anything beyond weapons. A dergho-oth's weapons are typically a hodgepodge of types and styles, usually scavenged from the dead and dying on the battlefields of the Blood War. The weapons are sometimes magical, though it is more common to find them using silver or cold iron weapons, and occasionally those crafted from Baatorian green steel or Gehennan morphuth iron. Anything more powerful than a +1 weapon is likely to be stolen by a higher-caste yugoloth.

While dergholoths may have no per- sonal appreciation for treasure, they recognize its value to others and make a habit of collecting and swallowing small baubles that they happen to scav- enge or take from the mezzoloths in their command. Later, when seeking to forestall punishment or simply try- ing to impress one of their overseers, dergholoths regurgitate portions of their scavenged wealth, though this tactic sometimes leads them better to simply cut them open and extract it all. Over time, other fiends have caught on to this, and the sight of gutted derg- holoth bodies is relatively common in the aftermath of any fiendish conflict involving loths.

KNOWLEDGE: THE PLANES

DC 17 Dergholoths are one of the lowest varieties of yugoloths, and are native to the neutral evil lower planes of Hades, Gehenna, and Carceri.

DC 12 A dergholoth's head can freely rotate atop its body, allowing them to effectively see in all directions at once and preventing them from being flanked.

DC 27 When pressed by large numbers of enemies, dergholoths emit a rapid and mind-numbing sound within a 40-foot radius that affects only non-yugoloths.

DC 32 Dergholoths swallow scavenged valuables, and their corpses (or living bodies) can be cut open to recover these items from inside their stomachs.

Organization Solitary, Squad (1 plus 3–5 mezzoloths), Platoon (2 plus 6–10 mezzoloths plus 1 pisco-oth)

Advancement 9–16 HD (Large); 7–25 HD, Huge

All-Around Vision (Ex) A dergholoth's head can freely rotate, which combined with its compound eyes grants it the ability to see in all directions at once, making it impossible to flank.

Chatter (Su) Once per day, a dergholoth can rapidly chatter and clack its mandibles together, affecting all non-yugoloths within 30 feet with the effects of a fascinating spell. This is a sonic, mind-affecting effect.

Improved Grab (Ex) To use this ability a dergholoth must hit with two claw attacks. It can then attempt to start a grapple as a free action without provoking an attack of opportunity.

Reform (Ex) Dergholoths killed within one of the neutral evil lower planes completely reform within 1d3 days.
